BEHIND THE LINES

Vibrations of the Impossible

By David Taylor

It was a typical airplane conversation—two strangers sharing basic bios about family and jobs—until she offered an editorial comment on my career choice: “Why dive? Can’t you see fish in an aquarium without getting wet?”

“Well, yes, I suppose you could,” I said as I began my tussle with a tear-resistant pack of complimentary peanuts. A polite response, but also a clear case of not coming up with the right retort when you need it. So now, a week later, here is what I wish I had said to the well-meaning sales manager from Iowa:

“Yes, ma’am, you can see lots of fish in an aquarium. But unless you get wet, you can’t kick out over a coral wall’s wrinkled vastness and stare down into the dim void of liquid space. I dive because floating weightless in that other world does something magical and strange to you. Having been there, you’re changed forever, renewed, and you’ll always see the surface world in a different light. That doesn’t happen walking through an aquarium.

“I also dive for the intense ‘now’ of it—the need to focus totally on the moment. Diving isn’t tomorrow or next week or the next quarter. Diving is so here and now that it makes time itself seem to slow: an hour under water feels more like 15 minutes. It’s therapeutic to forget so thoroughly about ‘normal’ life.

“I dive because there is no faking it down there. No dress code. No office politics. Only the raw honesty of a shark or the unabashed innocence of a rippling school of fish, each existing only for itself. I dive because as a sport it challenges me, teaches me, broadens me. Diving reminds me and everyone who does it that we are more than our jobs.

“Most of all, I dive because I can travel. Visiting places like Brazil’s Bay of Dolphins or Mexico’s Nohoch Nah Chich cave—places that reverberate with the impossible—I am taken beyond the confines of normal.

“You see, one of diving’s great gifts is travel. It breaks us out of the familiar routines of our daily cycle and puts us on the path of self discovery. By traveling, we find out who we are by seeing who we are not. The alone-time of travel gives us a chance to reconnect with feelings that aren’t allowed in the daily grind. Travel strengthens our self-confidence by forcing us to adjust to new and strange situations. It reawakens our ability to meet new people.

“But, most of all, dive travel lets us recapture our sense of adventure. As kids we see the world through the eyes of our adventure heroes—from Huck Finn to Jacques Cousteau, Tarzan to Marlin Perkins, Amelia Earhart to Nancy Drew. The pressure to ‘mature’ robs us of those youthful dreams. But they don’t go away; dreams deferred become slow-boiling pots of bitterness. Travel lets us recapture a sense of adventure in our lives, to live the dreams of our youth.

“Ma’am, I dive for all those reasons and maybe a few more. Now, can I help you with those peanuts?”

Ironically, on the very day of this non-conversation I was flying back to Savannah to finish work on the special issue you’re now holding. Ironical because it contains our annual International Dive Travel Directory. All of our regular departments are here—as well as a feature on deep-space explorers and why they do it—but so is the most comprehensive directory of worldwide dive opportunities ever compiled. More than 500 separate operators and their vacation offerings in 72 destinations across the globe and 129 live-aboard dive boats. Travel Directory Editor Nick Lucey and his team busted their humps to get it right for one good reason:

To give us plenty of ammunition in case anybody ever asks, “Why bother getting wet?”

Diving reminds me and everyone who does it that we are more than our jobs.

BIG IDEA!

EDI: THE COMPUTER BY SCUBAPRO

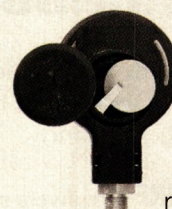

Big in features and safety, small in size and price, EDI is the latest addition to SCUBAPRO's high quality line of dive computers. New for 1996, EDI stands for Essential Diver's Information and that's exactly what it provides. Packaged in its own sleek, compact console, the EDI takes the place of a submersible pressure gauge, computer, depth gauge and dive watch.

EDI is the first really compact SCUBAPRO console to deliver so much information at such an affordable price. And you can replace your own batteries in the EDI, so there's no down time waiting for a service center to do it. It uses pager batteries, obtainable virtually anywhere.

They're also disposable without harming the environment.

Manufacturer's suggested retail price $449.

The EDI is pictured with the High Pressure Quick Disconnect accessory. This unique device allows you to safely and quickly disconnect your valuable instruments from the first stage for storage and dive planning.

Saddle Sore

I was disturbed to see you running an advertisement in your December issue that endorsed riding whale sharks. Having worked with whale sharks for three years now, I find it troubling that so many divers feel a need to ride these and other marine animals. This is inappropriate, and divemasters who endorse such behavior are showing their biological illiteracy by saying it does not affect these animals.

In my experience around numerous whale sharks, they are gentle creatures that will tolerate swimmers, divers and even boats without much concern. However, when these animals are grabbed, they will dive or swim away rapidly. This behavior is a flight response and means the animal is experiencing stress.

Not only does riding put these animals through a traumatic experience, it can be dangerous for the diver as well. I know of two divers who on separate occasions went for rides and were hit by a whale shark's large tail when letting go. Both were amazed by the force and said the impact was powerful. It could easily dislodge a mask or regulator and even knock a diver unconscious. Aside from the danger, one diver riding a whale shark shortens the experience of being near such an incredible animal for the rest of the divers in the group, a definite breach of diving etiquette.

Potato Heads

After returning from a dive vacation to Saba, I found your March issue in the mailbox and began to laugh about the mask defogger letters.

Between our dives, and even at other odd times, our discussion was often devoted to this very topic. It seems that one of the veteran divers in the group, Mickey Fiverson, had come up with a homegrown version of mask defogger. Mickey started each dive trip by putting a potato into his dive bag.

Each day he would cut a new piece off the spud and rub the inside of his mask lens, then pass it around for the rest of us to use. At first it seemed odd, but by the end of the vacation we were all lined up awaiting our turn with the potato slice.

The interesting thing about "lens spudding" is that this method is even cheaper than dishwashing liquids. Other advantages: It's easier to carry (no chance of messy spills). It helps divers support the potato farming communities of Maine, New York and Idaho. And finally, if the spud falls into the dive environment, no harm done at all. A spud for all reasons.

Freshwater Conservation

I enjoy your magazine tremendously and appreciate your concerns about our oceans, reefs and marine life. I too share these concerns. However, as a Tennessee resident, I am equally concerned about our inland waterways. How can I as an individual adopt a waterway, educate its users of the various ecosystems and promote responsible usage of the waterway? While our lakes, rivers, and streams may not be as pristine and diverse as our oceans, they do require just as much care and concern. I have made many dives in lakes and also rock quarries and find the fish life to be just as interesting as that in our oceans. Any help you can share with me will be appreciated.

Teaching an Old Diver New Tricks

A warning to old hands: 25 years ago, I was an avid and active diver. I logged nearly 1,500 dives in three years. Circumstances in my life changed, and I didn't dive again until 1995. I went to my local dive shop to talk about recertification. I was offered a four-hour refresher course, but after some consideration, elected the basic certification course.

I was sure glad I did. Some months later, I was on a dive in the Florida Keys on a boat where two of the divers had been away from the sport for a time. They had taken the refresher course. They were so unfamiliar with their equipment that their need for attention was a real distraction for everyone, not to mention the safety aspect. The crew was wonderful. Courtesy, however, should dictate that those away from the sport for a time should avail themselves of the many changes in safety and equipment in recent years. No doubt they and everyone diving with them would enjoy their experience more.

DEVELOPMENT THREAT

Save Klein Bonaire

Carl's Hill, Ebo's Special, Leonora's Reef—the names of legendary Klein Bonaire dive sites are recorded in the logbooks and memories of divers worldwide. But ecologists and dive operators on Bonaire fear that development plans for the island could spoil the crown jewel of the Bonaire Marine Park.

"It would be devastating," says park manager Kalli DeMeyer. "I don't see how you could develop Klein Bonaire without destroying the reefs' integrity."

The Island Government of Bonaire is in a standoff with the private development company that owns the 1,750-acre island. The government has flatly rejected the company's plan to build a luxury resort and several summer homes. "They can forget about it," says Commissioner of Tourism Jopie Abraham. "We will not allow any kind of development there."

But Maurice Neme, an Aruban who is the majority shareholder of the development company, says: "We're looking at an upscale market.

There are people willing to pay high prices to live and vacation on a private island."

Neme says the company received permission to build when it purchased the land in the 1970s. At the time, island officials were pro-development, but today the government recognizes the economic value of protecting reefs. More than 25,000 divers visit Bonaire each year, spending an estimated $30 million. RSD readers consistently name Bonaire as one of the world's top dive destinations (see "Top 100" and "Reader Ratings: Bonaire," RSD, Feb. '96).

The fringing reefs of Klein Bonaire have never suffered siltation or sewage runoff from development and are the healthiest in the marine park. Half of all boat trips run by Bonaire dive operators go to the small island, says Andre Nahr, managing director of Sand Dollar Dive and Photo. Klein Bonaire, located just 500 yards off the leeward shore, is also Bonaire's last undisturbed turtle nesting habitat.

Jeff Sybesma, an attorney and marine biologist with the Environmental Division of the central government, has written an opinion stating that developers can be prevented from building despite policies of the government 20 years ago, but pressure from wealthy developers makes any outcome uncertain should the issue end up in court.

DeMeyer and Jack Chalk, president of the Council of Underwater Resort Operators (CURO), say the only way to guarantee protection for Klein Bonaire is to purchase the island and make it a preserve in the marine park. But with an estimated purchase price of between $3 million and $10 million, the problem is financing, says Abraham. The government is considering options including a land-swap with the development group, private funding sources and financial assistance from the Netherlands in the form of a debt forgiveness plan. Send no resumes, but the job of your dreams is in Santa Fe, N.M.

Landlocked and bordering the Rocky Mountains, this semi-arid city is the unlikely home base of SCR—the Submerged Cultural Resources Unit of the National Park Service. Traveling the world over for Uncle Sam, the 10-member team does it all under water: conducting archaeological or cultural resource surveys, damage assessments, body recoveries and dynamiting navigational hazards.

"I consider myself a diver first, preservationist and then an archaeologist," says Daniel J. Lenihan, 50, a transplant from New York City who founded the team 24 years ago. "The kinds of things we do and environments we work in would intimidate a lot of the archaeologists out there."

With backgrounds ranging from commercial diving to anthropology, team members have explored sunken Japanese fleets off the Aleutians in the frigid Bering Sea and in the warmer Pacific waters of the Marshall Islands, mapped the USS Arizona in the murk of Pearl Harbor, confronted the cold depths and jigsaw puzzle of shipwreck remains off Isle Royale in Lake Superior, braved the treacherous currents of the English Channel examining the CSS Alabama, and surveyed archaeological remains under reservoirs throughout the Southwest.

Those first reservoir assignments in the late 1970s, expected to be only temporary projects, showed the need for such a team, and Lenihan readily agreed to continue as chief. In 1989, he led the team to Bikini Atoll on its biggest assignment: the first systematic survey of fully loaded warships sunk during atomic bomb tests 50 years ago. Based on the survey, returning Bikini Islanders have turned their island into a unique dive destination (see "Nuclear Test Ground Becomes Underwater Park," RSD, Aug. '95). Lenihan initially worried about the dangers from radiation levels and unexploded ammunition. After discovering the site was safe, he began to fear awestruck divers getting bent from dallying too long.

"Anybody whose heart is not pumping as they swim down onto the deck of the USS Saratoga just is not alive," says Lenihan. "You can approach it just like a plane coming in for a landing and swim from the flight deck into the hangar deck and see Helldivers lined up."

The job is not all diving adventure, however. Team members endure long separations from family, tangles of government red tape, wicked seas and brutal extremes in weather. Even so—unfortunately for the rest of us—there is little turnover in Lenihan's shop. "People tend to stay a long time," he says.

ECO-BATTLE UPDATE

Protesting for Paradise

Construction continues on a new cruise ship pier over Cozumel's Paradise Reef despite a new round of international opposition to the project.

A complaint against the project, filed by Mexican environmental organizations earlier this year, is being investigated by the Commission for Environmental Cooperation. The panel was created by the North American Free Trade Agreement to monitor how well the United States, Canada and Mexico enforce their environmental laws. "We've received several complaints, but this is the first petition that meets the criteria to require an official response," says CEC spokeswoman Rachel Vincent. Although the commission has no power to halt the project or impose sanctions if it finds violations, "our recommendations will have the weight of the public shame factor," says Vincent.

At press time, the Mexican government hadn't responded to the complaint, which claims Mexico violated its own environmental laws by allowing development group Consorcio H to build the pier. According to the Mexican Center for Environmental Law, the government failed to consider Cozumel's marine sanctuary designation and local laws, and didn't evaluate the environmental impact of the developer's entire plan, which includes passenger terminals and an 18-hole golf course.

A DIVER EXAMINES CORAL TRANSPLANTED TO MAKE WAY FOR COZUMEL'S NEW CRUISE SHIP PIER.

"This is the first issue the NAFTA commission has deemed worthy to follow up, so in a way we've had a certain victory," says Gustavo Alanis-Ortega, president of the Mexican Center for Environmental Law. "What we want is for the project developers to follow Mexico's environmental laws."

Pilings have been driven for most of the 848-foot pier on Paradise Reef, a popular shallow dive site. However, the CEC petition has already focused international attention on the pier. In February, a demonstration by Greenpeace—timed to coincide with a tour of the site by Julia Carabrias, the Mexican environmental minister who approved the project—delayed construction for a day when protesters chained themselves to cranes.

Cold Warrior

MICHIGAN SEA GRANT

The Cold War ended in 1989, but try telling that to nautical archaeologist Art Cohn. As director of the Lake Champlain Maritime Museum, Cohn is racing to protect the shipwrecks of Vermont's Lake Champlain against hordes of Eastern European invaders.

Colonies of zebra mussels were first observed in the Great Lakes in 1988 after surviving a transoceanic journey in the bilge water of European ships. In 1993, the invaders were discovered in southern portions of Lake Champlain, and by the end of 1994, they had spread the entire length of the lake.

The mussels reproduce rapidly and can quickly choke a lake's ecosystem. They use strong hair-like fibers to attach to solid underwater objects like shipwrecks. If attached to iron, mussels aid the deterioration of the metal. The mussels have no degenerative effects on wood, but large colonies of mussels can obscure artifacts beyond recognition and the weight of a colony can collapse an unstable wreck.

While some divers consider zebra mussels beneficial because of their ability to improve water clarity, Cohn and his colleagues are in a race to gather information on the lake's multitude of wrecks before mussels overtake them. "We must salvage as much information as we can," says

Cohn, who is planning a $2 million survey of the lake using sidescan sonar to inventory wrecks. When an interesting wreck is discovered, divers don dry suits and plunge into the lake's chilly waters (average temperatures range from the high 40Fs to the upper 60Fs), to survey interesting finds. Already, there are more than 200 known shipwrecks in Lake Champlain, a large number considering only 10 percent of the lake has been surveyed. "We believe there is a vast number of undiscovered wrecks," says Cohn. "Our goal is to locate and document these vessels before they disappear." —JOSH LARONGE

MARINE BIOLOGY

Hunting the Giant Squid

For hundreds of years, giant squid have been the feared monsters of sea stories and the elusive prey of scientists who gather information on the deep-sea creatures only when decaying bodies and tentacles occasionally wash ashore.

But lately, scientists are literally reeling them in. A giant squid was recently recovered off Australia, and December trolling expeditions in the deep waters of the Chatham Islands, 600 miles east of New Zealand, turned up three of the massive invertebrates. The latest find, hauled in with a net full of deep-water fish known as hoki, was a 26-foot-long juvenile female with 13-foot-long tentacles, a seven-foot-long body and a head nearly six feet long. She weighed nearly half a ton.

Steve O'Shea, a marine scientist with New Zealand's National Institute of Water and Atmospheric Research, says the squid is one of only 20 of its size recorded worldwide in the past decade. Although little is known about the reclusive animals, they are thought to reach lengths of 60 to 70 feet.

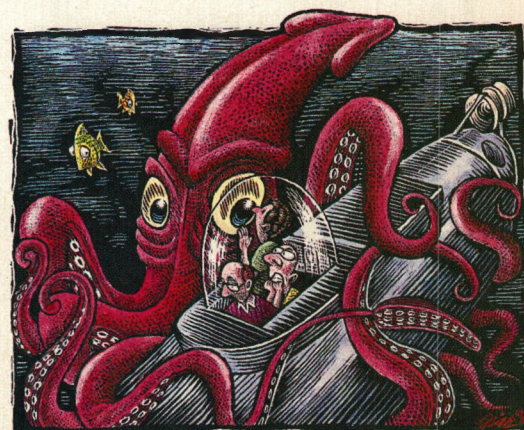

O'Shea says researchers don't know why they've found three of the giant squid in such a short time. "We certainly haven't seen them for two years and all of a sudden we get three," he says. "It could be luck, which I doubt, or it could be they're coming up from the deep, or it could be a change in migration that has brought them to New Zealand."

Encouraged by these squid discoveries, O'Shea and Clyde F. E. Roper of the Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History are planning an expedition straight from Jules Verne's 20,000 Leagues Under The Sea. If O'Shea and Roper can raise $5 million by winter, they plan to take a four-person submersible to 3,000 feet and be the first to go face-to-face with a living giant squid in its habitat.

"The sub is only seven meters long. That squid we got was eight meters and it was totally immature—so they grow a lot bigger," O'Shea says excitedly. "Can you imagine that eyeball staring right into the submersible?"

Yes, but who'll blink first?

Hitting the Panic Button

According to a University of Wisconsin sports psychologist, we divers are a nervous lot. If you've already read this month's Dive Medicine column (pg. 32) you know the stats: more than half of experienced divers report having had feelings of panic or example, Morgan found 64 percent of the women and 50 percent of the men report experiencing panic while under water. These include cases with identifiable sources of stress (equipment failure, entanglement) and those unexplained cases of panic that Morgan thinks are related to individual anxiety levels.

"Of those divers who have not reported panic episodes up to this point, it's probable that a number of these individuals will experience a panic attack in the future," he predicts. Scary, considering the obvious dangers.

Now it's your turn. Have you ever panicked under water? Tell us what you think about this phenomenon by calling our toll-free reader comment line, sending us e-mail or checking out our web site. We promise to keep all tales of panic episodes confidential when we publish the results in a future issue of RSD.

REEF BRIEFS

Marquesas Keys, Fla. ► Biological Warfare

Since their accidental import into the United States more than 60 years ago, fire ants have wreaked havoc on every ecosystem they've encountered. Their latest victim: sea turtles on the remote Marquesas Keys.

"We've got billions of fire ants here," says Tom Wilmers, biologist at the Key West National Wildlife Refuge, a 375-square-mile tract encompassing the islands 12 miles west of Key West. "We first saw them in one loggerhead turtle nest in 1990 and that number increased to nearly 50 percent by 1994. We have enough ants to pose a clear threat to the future of these nestlings." The voracious insects swarm turtle nests, devouring both eggs and hatchlings. To control the spread, researchers are studying an arsenal of biological weapons, including a fungus, flies and other ant species that prey on fire ants. —LANCE LEONHARDT

Pensacola, Fla. ► A Murky Past

The oldest shipwreck yet discovered off the Florida coast once again lies buried under sediment, despite two seasons of tantalizing archaeological finds—including a coin dating to 1491 and a rare armor breastplate.

The Spanish galleon in northwest Florida's Pensacola Bay was reburied last summer when state funding for excavation ran out. Based on their limited finds, archaeologists still can't say with certainty that the vessel is from the ill-fated fleet of Tristan de Luna, a Spanish explorer whose attempt to colonize the region in 1559 failed when a hurricane sank his fleet just days after arrival. Partial excavation in the bay's murky water has yielded hundreds of artifacts, from cannon balls and shards of Spanish and

Aztec pottery, to insect wings, rat bones and olive pits. These finds may ultimately help identify the ship, says State Underwater Archaeologist Roger Smith. —DAVID D. JANOWSKI

Seychelles ► Gangster's Paradise?

You've successfully embezzled $30 million and now you want a hide-away that's warm and sunny, has great diving and none of those troublesome extradition laws.

Try the Seychelles in the Indian Ocean. According to the Associated Press, a $10 million "citizenship fee" will get you a new passport and immunity from criminal prosecution by other nations. The only exception: violent crimes or cases of drug trafficking within the Seychelles.

Cool Shades

On a dive boat, your sunglasses should do more than just dilate your pupils. ~ by John Francis

With your farmer john peeled down to your waist, you slip on your sunglasses, lean against the bulkhead of the dive boat and scan the horizon, waiting. You squint into the glare, searching the cloud shadow on the water, evaluating the tide rip and the circling pelicans, still waiting. At last the moment comes, and you hear what you've been waiting for: "Dude! Cool shades!"

Sure they are, and we're all envious as hell. But factors other than style are important too, like protection from ultraviolet radiation that can turn your eyeballs into playground marbles.

Radiation Therapy

I know, you've heard the UV rap before: that it causes cataracts, pterygium, photo-keratitis, macular degeneration and other scary-sounding Latin words that—whatever they actually mean—add up to a dog with a handle in your future.

The good news is that virtually any sunglasses you buy in the U.S. are required to deliver at least some protection from ultraviolet radiation. But because shades also dilate your pupils—

Ikelite Arm System incorporates articulating arm with quick-release handle.

The versatile Quick Grip Arm system improves upon other ball socket designs and incorporates a quick-release handle.

Removable at the push of a button, the contoured rubber grip offers easy one-hand control when hand holding the strobe and remounting without changing the original adjustment. Larger aluminum ball diameter, thicker clamp plates, and large wing nuts provide vastly greater holding power.

This New Arm system fits all Ikelite housings and the New Nikonos V tray.

N5 Tray

Specifically designed for the Nikonos V.

The Ikelite N5 Mounting Tray is greatly reduced in size from usual camera mounting trays while providing attachment points for all Ikelite strobe mounting systems on either side of the tray. The design incorporates a rubber hand grip and adjustable velcro strap to provide comfort and security.

This unique tray becomes an integral part of the camera, making handling of the camera comfortable even without a strobe attached.

Also included is the Rapid Advance Lever for fast, easy film advancement.

letting more of whatever radiation the lens doesn't stop into your eyes—some protection might not be enough.

At a minimum, look for a sticker that says something like "UV protection—ANSI general purpose." That means the glasses block at least 60 percent of UV-A and 95 percent of UV-B radiation. (The ultraviolet spectrum is divided into "A," "B" and "C" segments with progressively shorter wavelengths; "C" is absorbed by the atmosphere.)

ANSI (the American National Standards Institute) has a slightly stiffer special-purpose standard found on many sunglasses: 60 percent of UV-A and 99 percent of UV-B. Other glasses claim 100 percent protection against both UV-A and UV-B.

After UV protection, look for polarization to reduce the glare from the water. Have you ever been mystified by a divemaster's description of a reef structure? "See that dark streak just to the left of the boat? That's the canyon cutting through the reef." If you couldn't see a thing, it was probably because you weren't wearing polarized sunglasses.

Another nice feature is optically correct lenses, which are distortion-free. Distortion, like glare, won't damage your eyes, the experts say, but both can give you a headache at the end of the day.

Glass or plastic lenses? Plastic is less likely to break, more likely to scratch. Even salt crystals can scratch some plastic lenses. Likewise, flexible frames are less likely to break but can't be adjusted to fit well. You choose.

More good news: it's no trouble to find sunglasses with polarized lenses that meet the ANSI special-purpose standard for about $12. Try Wal-Mart if you don't believe me.

The High Price of Style

So why spend $80 and up for famous-name sunglasses? Good question, particularly when everything on a dive boat seems to find its way under someone else's weight belt. Here's what the high price buys you:

► Credibility for the maker's UV claims. Hobie, for example, is probably more worried about the Federal Trade Commission and the Food and Drug Administration than is the guy at the swap meet.

► 100 percent protection against both UV-A and UV-B radiation.

► More durable UV protection, because quality manufacturers sandwich their UV shield inside the lens instead of coating it on the outside, as is often the case with drugstore sunglasses. Those manufacturers say repeated wiping of cheap shades can rub off the UV protection. (True? My six-year-old $12 sunglasses still test at 100 percent UV protection. But maybe I'm just lucky.)

► Noticeably better optical performance—sharpness, glare reduction, contrast, etc. You actually do see better through expensive sunglasses.

► Better materials, like plastic lenses made from scratch-resistant CR-39 or shatterproof polycarbonate instead of acrylic.

► And, frankly, all that money buys a lot of expensive marketing.

Surprisingly, the best reason to pop for a big-name brand may be the wide variety of frame styles. Sunlight reflecting off the water is a big problem on a boat, and you need close-fitting sunglasses that shield your eyes from all directions. But most drugstore sunglasses follow the current fashion for small lenses, which might be worse than useless on a boat. If they don't stop light coming from below and from the sides, all they accomplish is dilating your pupils.

DON'T FORGET SUNBLOCK

Reflection off the water increases the need for UV protection of your skin, too. More than a painful sunburn is at stake here: about 2,600 Americans die of skin cancer every year. As the ozone layer degrades, that figure is expected to go up.

The easy prevention is a waterproof sunblock with a high SPF number—the higher the better, since even waterproof sunblock washes off somewhat. Some people with sensitive skin may react to high SPF numbers, so test a new sunscreen on a small patch of the skin on the inside of your forearm.

As a diver, you need a sunblock that is exceptionally waterproof and that doesn't migrate readily from your forehead to your eyes. Many sunblock manufacturers make "sport" formulations for this purpose.

And don't forget your lips, which have little or no melanin, the pigment that is your body's natural defense against ultraviolet damage. Lip balms with SPF numbers as high as 30 are now available.

Small lenses in a wraparound frame that fits your face snugly and accurately may be fine—until the frame gets bent slightly. Big lenses in a wraparound frame, or one with side panels like the traditional fisherman's glasses, might be a smarter choice. Yes, the fashion penalty is stiff. But it's better to look like a cataract patient than to become one.

Our chart shows four examples of high-priced shades from companies that focus especially on water sports, plus a Bollé to illustrate ideal eye coverage. These five claim full UV-A and UV-B protection. Also included are two Brand X sunglasses for those of us on a budget. Both meet the ANSI special-purpose UV standard. Remember, finding a frame that fits your particular face is probably more important than finding one with the highest UV-protection claims. ☺

EXPLORERS OF THE DEEP HAVE ALWAYS HAD THE DECK STACKED AGAINST THEM. Society has always deemed “up” to be a very good thing and “down” to be something quite awful. The ancient Greeks celebrated an ethereal kingdom of nectar-sipping gods perched high on Mount Olympus, but trembled at the thought of Hades lurking in his deep, subterranean torture chamber. These prejudices remain with us today. Catch Jimmy Swaggart on a Sunday morning—redemption awaits the righteous high in heaven; teeth-gnashing awaits sinners in Lucifer’s deep inferno.

The struggle then, for those explorers who would probe the earth’s deepest places, extends well beyond physical barriers. Dropping into the abyss doesn’t carry the prestige of soaring to new heights, of being Sir Edmund Hillary or Neil Armstrong. Nor does it attract financing. “It is so frustrating,” legendary deep ocean explorer Sylvia Earle has said. “Particularly when the government spends $26 million for one toilet on the space shuttle and then discusses eliminating the entire budget for underwater research.”

No one can question the desire to go deep that burns within the following seven divers. In each of their own ways, they have plunged deeper than anyone else on the planet, and they've done so with little to gain. They share many characteristics—the chutzpah needed to scrape together funds for expeditions; an appreciation for the mystery of total darkness; and ultimately, an understanding that beyond a certain point, there is no turning back in the exploration of the deep. Beyond a certain point, pressure can cause a body to lose complete control. A chest cavity can implode. Oxygen can poison the blood. A diver can run out of air. Awful things can happen in the deep.

Yet for these men and women, this is not hell. Only great depth grants the opportunity to witness unimaginable life forms, to observe the artistic merging of water and rock, and to test the amazing limits of mind and body. For these people, heaven is a deep, deep place.

PIPIN

“I just do this for myself,” sniffs free diver Francisco Ferreras, aka Pipin, aloofly. “If I break a record, that is great. If not, well, O.K.”

Sure it's O.K. He is Pipin, no? The people, they love him in Paris. They adore him in Rome. They worship him in Madrid. His phenomenal breath-holding plunge to 422 feet is, of course, muy increíble.

Will anybody ever free dive beyond 500 feet? “Yes,” snaps the Cuban-born man-fish. “Someday. Somebody. Maybe me.”

As of this writing, throngs of cooing journalists from Europe and Japan (where breath-hold diving is hot, hot, hot) were congregating near Cabo San Lucas on Mexico's Baja Peninsula for a major international event—the Great One was attempting to shatter his own record with a “no-limits” attempt to 428 feet.

The obscure sport of free diving divides itself into three categories: “constant-ballast,” where the diver must wear a weight belt while descending and returning by fin power; “variable-ballast,” where he can jettison the weight before ascending, and “no-limits,” Pipin's category, which allows him to attach an unlimited amount of ballast to an underwater “sled” fixed to a line to speed the descent.

After a certain point in free diving, the process becomes an intense mental effort at blocking out a myriad of physiological roadblocks: the incredible pressure that vice-clamps the chest cavity; the bends (which Pipin has suffered twice), and shallow-water blackout during the rapid ascent via inflatable lift bag. Physically, Pipin trains for this gauntlet by jogging and lifting weights. Mentally, he spends hours meditating in a swimming pool, trying to simulate the psychological state of his dives. During the roughly three minutes it takes to torpedo to 400-plus feet and return to the surface, Pipin explains: "Nothing goes through my mind."

After taking the no-limits record from the legendary Jacques Mayol in 1990 and swapping it back and forth with Italian Umberto Pelizzari during the first part of the decade, Pipin now seems to have a lock on the deepest free-dive category. But for him, that is not enough. "I can go deeper," he insists. "I'm just trying to see how deep."

JIM BOWDEN ANN KRISTOVICH

"The whole purpose is to see the bottom," insists Jim Bowden. "At that, I have failed."

It is a strange confession from the man who has plunged deeper on standard scuba gear than anyone on the planet. But for a single-minded spelunker like Bowden, depth represents simply another hurdle to overcome en route to a greater purpose—raw cave exploration. "I'm equally proud of my eight years of exploration in Belize," says the 55-year-old Texan. "And my deepest dive there was only 46 feet. The idea is to go where the cave goes. Zacaton just goes straight down."

Zacaton, the infamous 1,080-foot pit in northeastern Mexico that snuffed out the life of cave-diving legend Sheck Exley, has hypnotized Bowden like Everest enthralled Edmund Hillary. A deeper submerged cave has not been found. On April 6, 1994, Exley and Bowden made the first attempt to bottom out in Zacaton together, descending rapidly into the blackness on two separate lines and switching gas mixtures all the way down. At 918 feet, Bowden ran out of gas and began his ascent. Exley never re-emerged. The loss shocked the cave-diving community and saddened Bowden—but it spurred him to continue, not to quit.

Fortunately, when Bowden launches the second full-scale effort to the cenote's bottom—a solo dive, possibly this month—Ann Kristovich will head up his support team. Co-leader with Bowden of the Proyecto de Buceo Espeleológico Mexico y America Central, Kristovich set a women's deep scuba record of 553 feet in Zacaton in 1993, and she has only recently accepted that recognition as a positive thing. "I personally don't feel a need for the sexual distinction," she says. "But there are a lot more women in technical diving now, and they want attention brought to the record, so that's fine. It's good to have role models."

The team's second assault on Zacaton will differ significantly from the first. Bowden will wrap himself in seven tanks instead of five, and each will be larger; adjustments that will double his bottom mix. He'll also use a decompression habitat during the final 30 feet of his eight-hour ascent, a move that he hopes will prevent the painful DCS hits he has experienced on past dives.

If Bowden successfully hits bottom, the team can then focus on the next step—finding the possible connections between Zacaton and a handful of neighboring cenotes, like Caracol, a mysterious pit that sits virtually next door but remains completely unexplored. "Who knows?" muses Kristovich excitedly. "Caracol and Zacaton could be connected at 1,000 feet with one big room."

below the surface of the earth in Mexico's Huautla cave system, huddled in total darkness on a soggy platform suspended next to a deafening waterfall. The first stage on her rebreather had just crapped out. Bill Stone, her significant other, fumbled to fix it in the blackness. One member of their expedition had recently died. Others had simply quit. Am Ende wondered if greater powers weren't trying to tell her something. "Then, after we decided not to dive that day, I found my sleeping bag was completely soaked," she says. "We tried to dry it off with the stove and succeeded in melting a hammock."

When am Ende and Stone successfully traversed the seemingly impenetrable San Agustin sump the next morning and kept alive exploration in the world's most technically difficult cave

Things couldn't have been worse for Barbara am Ende on the afternoon of April 29, 1994. She was 3,975 feet system, they accomplished something no one has before—diving thousands of feet below the earth's surface. There are four caves on the planet that plumb slightly deeper than 4,839-foot Huautla, but these systems are mostly dry. And unlike the water-filled caverns of north Florida, where divers park their trucks at the entrance and jump right in, Huautla forces explorers to spend days climbing, swimming and hauling gear through three-and-a-half miles of tunnels, lakes and waterfalls before the diving even begins.

"You've come all this way for days, and then you start looking at that dark inky tunnel, and all kinds of things start playing in your mind," says Stone.

"You don't know until you're actually there who can handle it and who can't."

After reconnaissance diving in the 1,800-foot-long sump by Noel Sloan, Steve Porter, Ian Rolland and Kenny Broad, Stone and am Ende negotiated the cavern only to find an even more daunting obstacle on the other side, after a stretch of dry passage—a monster sump that plunges at a 30-degree slope and may reach depths of more than 300 feet.

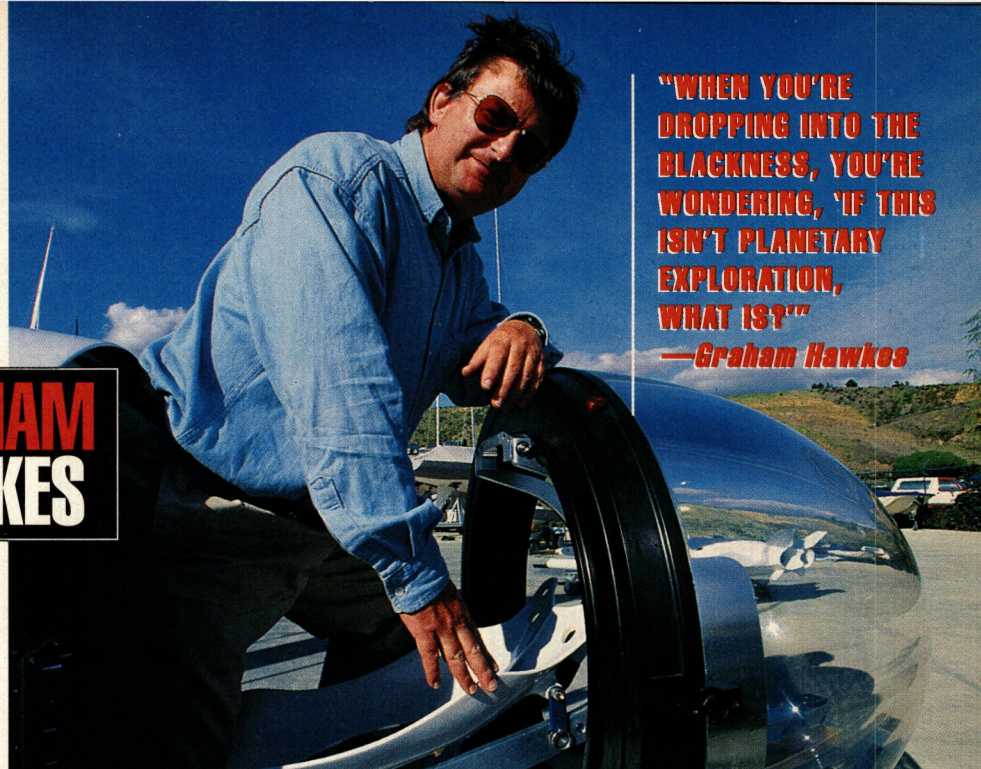

If Stone and his team can penetrate that sump on their return expedition in 1998, they stand a chance of linking the system to a set of resurgent springs at Pena Colorada, a feat that would drop Huautla almost 500 more vertical feet and prove it to be the deepest cave in the world. Logistically, physically and mentally, a greater nightmare would be difficult to script. "For one thing," figures Stone, "I expect we'll have to spend one full month completely under ground."

Graham Hawkes' 3,000-foot solo dive near California's San Clemente Island in 1985 in the spherical submersible Deep Rover could have been scripted by Tom Clancey. "We were trying to find a gentle slope to the bottom to run some routines," recalls Hawkes. "But first we ran into a Navy munitions dump that wasn't supposed to be there, and then there was this Soviet spy sub circling us. You could see the hammer and sickle painted on it. We informed them of our location, but we couldn't get them on the radio."

No missiles were launched, Hawkes survived, and somehow, despite the commotion, the British-born inventor set a new solo diving record. He couldn't be more unimpressed. "If a single pilot ever decided to go down in Alvin alone he would break the record easily," he notes matter-of-factly, referring to the deep sea submersible at Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. Hawkes' apathy stems from the fact that his goal lies much deeper—the Mariana Trench to be precise, the deepest point on the planet.

People have visited this Pacific chasm seven miles beneath the Marianas Islands only once. French designer Jacques Piccard and U.S. Navy Lieutenant Don Walsh plunked down into the trench in a steel bathyscaphe in 1960, where they sat still and observed very little for 30 minutes. Hawkes plans to roar back aboard Deep Flight II, his jet fighter-inspired, single-person sub with wide-ranging mobility and a 24-hour air supply. His prototype, Deep Flight I, possesses everything the second generation sub will feature with one crucial exception—a hull fashioned from super-strong ceramics to withstand water pressure that crushes at a force of eight tons per square inch.

Hawkes hopes to launch his mission sometime in 1998, if he can raise the $10 million necessary to build his machine. "Given that we need one-third the budget for an America's Cup campaign," Hawkes says confidently, "I don't think we'll have any problems raising it."

Indeed, Kristof has scoured the depths of all four oceans and a good many lakes with so many lights, lenses, gadgets and so much artistic force that his images have largely defined the way we perceive the world thousands of feet below the surface.

How to be a GREAT Dive Buddy

What do scuba diving and slow dancing have in common? Ask your favorite dive buddy.
By Jon Hardy

ALTHOUGH SCUBA DIVING, DANCING AND RIDING A bicycle built for two can each be done alone, the joy of sharing these activities is half the fun.

Unfortunately, although most divers prefer to buddy dive—and are well advised to do so—many are not good buddies. As our own experiences confirm, there's a lot more to buddy diving than simply jumping into the same ocean with someone.

The Keys to Buddy Diving

As with any recreational activity, zealous overplanning and an obsessive safety-above-all-else attitude can take the joy right out of it. The purpose of scuba diving is not safety, but enjoyment of the underwater world. Only by placing the emphasis on the joy of sharing diving can we focus on the true keys to being a great dive buddy.

tip 1 Defining the Comfort Zone

To provide a margin of safety for ourselves, we should dive within our own comfort zone, which is defined by the depth, time, activity level and water conditions we're comfortable with. However, when buddies dive together, the team's comfort zone should be the comfort zone of the lesser of the two divers. For example, the faster swimmer should slow to a pace well within the slower buddy's comfort zone. Although defining a common comfort zone may sometimes restrict a more experienced or fit buddy, by working together divers can create a whole greater than its individual parts.

tip 2 Selecting Compatible Activities

When diving with a buddy, your planned activities should be complementary, but not necessarily identical. Sightseeing and videography go well together, while close-up reef photography and drift spearfishing don't. Compatibility also applies to skills: One diver may be better at compass navigation while the other is better at maintaining a constant depth. By finding ways to complement each other, both divers benefit.

Test Yourself

Answers on pg. 31.

tip 3 Building Cooperation

One school of thought holds that one buddy should be the leader, the other a follower. A more productive approach is for buddies to communicate effectively so that each diver can take on aspects of both leader and follower. Buddy diving should be an equal and cooperative relationship filled with communication, both in and out of the water, not a competition to see who can go deeper, swim faster or bag more game. Most importantly, in a completely cooperative relationship, either buddy can decide at any time not to dive or to terminate a dive in progress—and then cooperate in exiting the water.

tip 4 Reducing Stress

Diving with a buddy should reduce stress, not produce it. To ensure that it does, make pauses together at each transition, such as the beginning of a descent or an ascent. When a long surface swim is needed, alternate front and back swimming with your buddy to reduce stress.

tip 5 Increasing Awareness

The key to more relaxed diving is increased awareness of yourself, your equipment, your environment and, especially, your buddy. Increased buddy awareness can be achieved with a slight touch, listening to bubble sounds, a brief sideways glance or even holding hands. The goal of these techniques is to reduce stress and the likelihood of separation, while improving your ability to assist each other and share the dive by becoming more aware of your buddy.

The How-tos of Buddy Diving

The techniques of buddy diving are based on the concept of individual responsibility. By agreeing to be a buddy, you incur both moral and legal obligations: to stay together, to help each other, to provide assistance in an emergency and to follow generally accepted dive procedures to the best of your ability.

tip 6 Plan Together

Although usually informal and verbal, dive plans should be written out for more complex and demanding dives. Whether verbal or written, dive plans should include:

- ☒ The dive's purpose and activities
- ☒ General direction and route
- ☒ Cutoff points for depth, time, air or decompression
- ☒ How to change the plan.

Most textbooks still say not to change a dive plan while under water, but recreational divers have been doing so since the birth of the sport. Dive computers, especially, have made diving more flexible, and divers should take advantage of this technology, which gives us the freedom to alter a dive plan when a special opportunity arises.

tip 7 Limit the Group

Buddy groups can include up to four divers. More than four divers becomes a group tour, not a buddy group. Threesomes have been criticized by some dive leaders and implicated in diving accidents and legal cases. It is not that three people diving together is wrong or fundamentally unsafe. But if one diver of the three is lost, it means that all three failed in their obligation to keep track of one another.

tip 8 Check and Double-Check

You've heard it before: you check yourself, your gear and the environment; then you check each other, each other's gear and the environment together. The more you dive with the same person, the quicker and easier this procedure becomes. In addition to pre-dive buddy checks, you should also share your experiences after diving as you log the dive and observe each other for any difficulties.

tip 9 Learn to Communicate

Regardless of what form of underwater communication you employ—hand signals or gestures, writing on slates, sounds such as instrument beeps or tapping on tanks, even wireless voice units—the key is to agree beforehand which to use and how. One form of communication that is often poorly done is the sharing of information from instruments such as pressure gauges and dive computers. Rather than using hand signals or written notes, it is far more effective to show each other the instruments. Of course, this requires that buddies know how to read each other's instruments, another aspect of pre-dive checks.

tip 10 Stay Together

One of the problems with leader-follower buddy pairs is that they often result in perhaps the worst possible positioning—one buddy above and behind the other. The keys to staying together are:

- ☒ dive side-by-side
- ☒ stay on the same side for as much of the dive as possible
- ☒ head in an agreed-upon direction
- ☒ stay aware of each other.

Brightly colored dive gear greatly aids in visual recognition of your buddy and increases the distance from which you'll be able to recognize your buddy. If visibility is especially poor, a buddy line (a short line held by both buddies) may be used. You can also hold hands or wrists at anytime during a dive to keep track of each other without looking. Some divers hold a piece of the other diver's gear, such as a BC strap or gauge console, when the other diver needs both hands free.

tip 11 Monitor Air Consumption

No two divers will use air at exactly the same rate. Returning from a dive based on the air supply of the person with the least air adds another sensible margin of safety. If there is a significant disparity in air consumption, using tanks with different capacities can balance time in the water. Other techniques that can be used to balance in-water time include the diver with less air staying shallower but still in sight; the diver with more air performing any activities that would increase air use, such as filling lift bags, moving objects or carrying gear.

A controversial technique used by regular buddies and dive guides is to have the diver with less air breathe from one of the other diver's regulators as they swim side-by-side, holding hands. This nonemergency air sharing can be used to prolong a dive, make a safety stop, or swim under water back to the exit point. Those who oppose this technique believe that alternate air sources should be used only during emergencies, that recreational divers are not skilled enough to share air safely, and that it causes two divers to be low on air rather than one. However, those who use this technique believe that when used properly, it can improve safety and enjoyment by keeping divers under water where they belong, while also providing skill practice. When using this technique, the diver with less air should have at least 500 psi, while the diver with more air should have more than 1,000 psi available.

What to Do When There are Problems

No matter how long you dive, no matter your skill level or your buddy's, sooner or later you will encounter some underwater difficulty.

tip 12 Separation

If you become separated from your buddy under water, stop, look around, rise a few feet, look around again, turn to the side your buddy was on and keep looking while backtracking slowly. Listen and watch for bubbles or a sound signal. Try signaling your buddy. If in a short period of time you have not located your buddy, slowly surface while continuing to look around. If you both follow this procedure, you will meet at the surface. If your buddy does not surface and cannot be located by bubbles at the surface, initiate emergency procedures for a lost diver.

How long should you look under water? Most textbooks say one minute, a few say 30 seconds or two minutes. In real life, most divers take more time looking than textbooks recommend.

Another significant concern is that it may not be prudent to surface to look for your buddy if there is an overhead obstruction (cave, wreck or ice diving), if you're in strong currents (drift diving), if you're in an area of boat traffic, or if you need to decompress. In these cases another procedure is called for, such as meeting at an agreed-upon place under water.

tip 13 Emergencies

An important part of being a good buddy is rendering assistance when difficulties occur so that they don't escalate into an emergency. For example, one buddy becomes low on air during a dive that requires a slow ascent and safety stop. The best procedure is to share air before the low-on-air diver is out of air so that the ascent and safety stop can be made under control. Of course, this procedure requires a contingency agreement before the dive as to which regulator will be passed and how.

The same concept can be applied to underwater problem solving. When things get difficult, divers should stop, breathe easy, get under control, and then take deliberate action. With a buddy, these steps should be taken together. If the action step does not solve the problem while still under water, then it is time to surface slowly and under control. On the surface, the diver experiencing the difficulty should establish positive buoyancy, first by use of the BC or, as a last resort, by ditching weights. This is where you as a buddy come in: If your buddy is not taking correct or timely

High Anxiety

By Samuel Shelanski, M.D.

Have you ever panicked under water? Has your heart ever pounded so hard that you felt like you couldn't get enough air? Have you been so disoriented that you didn't know which way was up? Because of some stress—you were low on air, a great white was staring you down—have you ever lost control and acted irrationally? If so, then you're not alone. According to a recent study out of the Sport Psychology Lab at the University of Wisconsin, more than half of experienced divers surveyed said that they had experienced panic or near-panic while diving. Dr. William Morgan's study, published in the December 1995 issue of Sports Medicine, suggests that for divers, mental fitness may be at least as important as physical fitness. The study also raises some serious questions: Do certifying agencies adequately address the dangers of diver panic? Can divers and

AVOIDING PANIC

There are some underwater situations that would cause any diver to panic. Turning around to find yourself face-to-face with a great white springs to mind. However, there are ways to minimize the risk of ending up in a situation that might result in a panicked response.

► DON'T DIVE BEYOND YOUR CAPABILITIES. Make sure that you are experienced enough to make the dive you're planning. A buddy's training does not replace the need for your own.

► AVOID GETTING INTO A SITUATION THAT YOU'RE NOT EQUIPPED TO HANDLE. Don't try to squeeze in that last dive at dusk, unless you're prepared to finish it as a night dive. And if you don't have the proper equipment to make a certain dive, such as a wreck penetration, don't try to fudge it and make do with what you've got. It's better to pass on the dive and do it another day.

► STAY CURRENT WITH YOUR TRAINING. When was the last time that you practiced buddy breathing? How about a ditch and don? Cleared your mask? For too many of us, it was when we got certified, which may have been many years ago. It's important to stay current with skills, and to practice skills that are appropriate to the type of diving you're doing.

► DON'T DIVE IF IT DOESN'T FEEL RIGHT. You may be eminently qualified to make the dive you've planned. You may have done it 20 times before, but if something doesn't feel right when it's time to get into the water, don't. Don't let your ego get in the way of safety. Pass on the dive, and make sure you're around to do it another day.

potential divers who are prone to panic be identified and treated?

The Consequences

There is little question that panic strikes divers, occasionally with catastrophic effects. Many experts, including Dr. Carl Edmonds, author of Diving and Subaquatic Medicine, believe that panic is the leading cause of diving fatalities.

The National Underwater Accident Data Center (NUADC) attributes 19 percent of the scuba deaths from 1976 to 1988 to panic, with another 22 percent resulting from unknown causes. Many divers whose deaths have been attributed to drowning are found with adequate air in their tanks and no obvious problem with their equipment. It is thought that a large number of these fatalities are the result of panic attacks.

Panic is also implicated in many cases of arterial gas embolism (AGE). AGE results almost exclusively from rapid, often uncontrolled ascents. While a small number of these cases are the product of inadequate training or equipment malfunction, the vast majority are divers who make panicked beelines for the surface.

GEORGE STEVENSE/EARTHWATER

Are You Adequately Trained?

With panic being of such concern to divers, it seems natural that it would be covered in-depth during certification courses. Morgan, however, says that's not the case. He contends that the major certifying agencies have downplayed the risks associated with diving as part of the growing commercialization of the sport. As a result, Morgan says, many people who never would have taken up diving 20 years ago—when it was still considered something of an extreme sport—have flocked to their local dive shops.

Both PADI and NAUI refute Morgan's claims that they ignore the issue of panic in their training. PADI issued a two-and-a-half page response to the study, which questions many of the points raised by Morgan and points out that PADI's Open Water Diver Manual and Rescue Diver Manual, as well as their accompanying videos, specifically discuss panic and its associated hazards.

Can We Test for Panic?

While diving is significantly safer now than it was at its inception, there are still some very real risks every time someone enters the marine environment. It's only realistic to assume that some of the vast number of divers who have entered the sport over the past several years are mentally less well-equipped to cope with potential problems under water, and therefore may be more prone to panic than their predecessors.

Is there any way to identify which divers are at higher risk of panic attacks? According to Morgan, there is. He claims that divers who score significantly higher than other divers on a test that measures "trait anxiety" are potentially at greater risk of panic attacks while diving. Trait anxiety is regarded as an enduring feature of an individual's personality, whereas "state anxiety" is situational. Tests that measure anxiety, Morgan says, make it possible to predict panic behavior in beginning divers with 88 percent accuracy.

Should we be screening for these traits in divers? Most certifying agencies require medical clearance prior to allowing an individual to start a certification course. Should this now include a psychological profile?

Probably not. Divers in the study who were identified as being at higher risk of panic attacks were not people with clinical mental illnesses, they simply had a higher anxiety level than other divers. Excluding them from diving on this ground would be extraordinarily difficult, if not illegal.

So what can be done to address the issues that Morgan raises? At the professional level, instructors must be trained to recognize divers who exhibit high levels of anxiety, and to recommend further training or deny certification to these divers. On an individual level, divers must be aware of the risks associated with diving and be able to make an honest assessment of their personal anxiety level and how it might change in case of a high-stress situation under water. Research such as Morgan's may eventually provide a tool for divers to be able to assess their own risk for panic and for instructors to know more about their students in relation to this often undiagnosed and unrecognized problem. ☞

Surefire Exposures

Text and photography by Franklin J. Viola

No painter worth his weight in burnt sienna would ever think of putting a brush to canvas without carefully considering how to use tone and contrast to build an effective composition. Similarly, the key to creative photography is learning how to read light and then use it to create varying degrees of shade and shadow. Like good painters, photographers enhance their images with contrast, and use light to paint subjects onto their celluloid canvases.

Available Light

Available light, for most underwater photographers, strictly means "sunlight." But as they become more advanced, most photographers soon learn that available light comes in an assortment of intensities that can add drama or subtlety to every subject or scene.

There are two ways to build contrast in a photograph: with color and with shade. Unfortunately, available light under water is monochromatic, like the light in black and white photography. As a result, the color of the subject often appears nearly the same as the background.

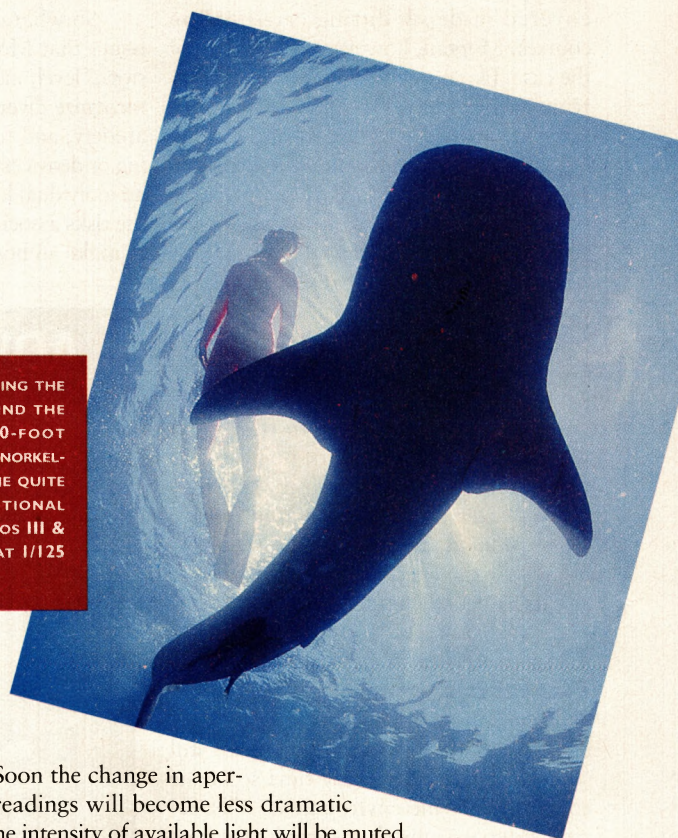

You may be able to see color contrast under water, but your film rarely will. Therefore, the best way to build contrast is with shadow and shade. This means placing dark subjects against light backgrounds or bright subjects against dark backgrounds. In most cases, the background in available light photographs will be (or should be) open water.

Available-Light Exposures

The most significant factor in available-light photographs is the position of the sun. With the sun at your back, a subject will appear lighter than the darker background water. If the sun is in front of your camera lens, the subject will appear darker than the surrounding water. Determining the correct exposure for either kind of photograph requires you first to determine what intensity of water color will build contrast most effectively.

Upon entering the water, look at the intensity of available light beginning at the surface and filtering down toward the bottom. You should be able to see defined layers—bands of blue and green shades—shading from light to dark as you descend through the water column. With your light meter parallel to the surface, examine the exposure value of each unique layer as you pass through it. Aperture readings near the surface will be quite small, but this intensity will fall off quickly after you descend only a few feet. Soon the change in aperture readings will become less dramatic and the intensity of available light will be muted.

Deciding which exposure reading to use is largely determined by where your subject is located. Most underwater photographers have been taught to get deeper than their subject and "shoot up," but choosing an exposure setting by metering the sun's intensity on the surface and then shooting a subject occupying space much deeper will simply bury it in an abyss of black.

When metering background water, choose an exposure that contrasts with your subject, but also produces the quality and intensity of color you desire. If you're using a housed SLR, set the in-camera meter to "spot" (if available) or "center-weight." This will allow you to pinpoint a specific area of water rather than obtaining an overall average reading as rendered by matrix metering. Be sure to set your camera's exposure mode to manual so that it does not automatically reset the exposure each time you recompose the picture. Because the Nikonos' built-in light meter is weighted center to bottom-center, point the lens so its midpoint is just slightly lower than the water color you wish to capture. Choose a shutter speed fast enough to prevent camera shake (1/30 or 1/60 sec. for scenics, 1/125 sec. or faster for moving subjects). The aperture setting (f-stop) in your meter will be determined by the film speed (ISO) and shutter speed.

Silhouettes

If the bold outline of a subject is highly recognizable, yet dramatic enough to stand alone without cosmetic detail, why light it? Underwater silhouettes are the easiest images to produce and some of the most visually interesting. For the best results, try shooting one on a bright sunny day while in sight of the surface. Place your subject directly between the sun and your lens. This will underexpose the subject, making it appear very dark against the bright background. If you're using a camera meter, be sure to read the light about 15 to 20 degrees to one side of the sun.

Photographers without camera meters can apply the "sunny 16 rule" to shooting silhouettes. In bright sunlight, simply set the lens aperture to  $f/16$ . Determining the shutter speed is easy since it is approximately equal to your film speed (shutter speed equals  $1/\text{ISO}$  to the nearest camera setting). Using a film with a speed of ISO 100, the shutter speed ( $1/100$ ) would be  $1/125$  sec., the closest setting. The "sunny 16 rule" provides a good starting point from which to bracket (alter the exposure by changing the aperture in half f-stop increments) our shots. Higher shutter speeds ( $1/125$  sec. or faster) will also freeze streaking sun rays and make silhouettes more dramatic.

Artificial Light

To put color back into underwater photography, we depend on artificial light. The key to using a strobe as your primary light source under water is to understand that the exposure is determined solely by strobe-to-subject distance and not by camera-to-subject distance.

One way to determine how much light a strobe will put out at a given distance is by using the strobe's guide number. Guide numbers, usually supplied by the manufacturer, are determined by the brightness of the strobe at a particular power setting and film speed. Guide numbers will tell you what aperture setting to use when a subject is a certain number of feet away from your strobe (f-stop equals guide number divided by strobe-to-subject distance). If your strobe's guide number is 32 (using ISO 100 film and strobe set on full power), then what aperture would you choose for a subject two feet away? Guide number 32 divided by 2 feet equals  $f/16$ .

This formula works great topside, but light is absorbed and dispersed in a nongeometric fashion under water. Besides the obvious loss of light due to depth, guide numbers vary from one diving environment to the next. Cold, dark water can eat a full f-stop or more of light compared to warm, tropical water. Few submersible strobes have an effective range beyond eight feet under water.

Macro Photography

The best way to determine the power output of your strobe is to conduct your own test, starting with macro photography. Here, your strobe is the primary (and most likely the only) source of light. The best place to test is in the same environment where you will be diving. However, a swimming pool will suffice as long as your subjects are not resting on the highly reflective bottom. Two milk crates stacked on end and covered with a dark towel (to absorb light) work extremely well as an artificial reef.

Using either a housed SLR or a submersible camera with a 1:3 extension tube (or a close-up kit), choose the fastest shutter speed that the camera will synchronize with the strobe ( $1/60$  sec. for older cameras,  $1/250$  for newer SLRs) and set the lens to its smallest aperture (usually,  $f/22$  or  $f/32$ ). Place the strobe one foot away from your subject and shoot a frame. Record the exposure (film, aperture, shutter speed, strobe power and distance) on a slate and then bracket the next exposure by opening the lens one-half f-stop ( $f/16.5$  from  $f/22$ ). Bracket and record each exposure down through  $f/8$ . Next, run the test again, this time with your strobe-to-subject distance set at two feet. Continue testing up to a strobe-to-subject distance of three feet. Finally, run your entire test again on another subject that is lighter or darker than your first subject.

Wide-Angle Photography

Once your strobe tests with macro photography are complete, change to your widest lens and repeat the step-by-step procedure. To check your strobe's angle of coverage and color temperature, make a color card. Buy a 16-inch by 20-inch plastic "For Sale" sign, and divide the white back into four quadrants using one-inch masking tape. Spray paint the quadrants bright red, yellow, blue and 18 percent gray, respectively. Remove the masking tape to provide some white on your color card. Have a buddy hold it or simply secure it to your artificial reef. Conduct your tests out to a strobe-to-subject distance of six feet (eight or more if you wish) and through an aperture setting of  $f/2.8$ .

View all the test film on a light table and check for sharpness with at least a 4x loupe. Compare the exposures and note which aperture/strobe-to-subject distance combinations produced the best results. Compile this information into a simple-to-read exposure guide, laminate it and affix it to the side of your strobe.

LIVE-ABOARDS

Today we live in what some dive travel specialists call "The Golden Age of Live-aboard Diving." The phrase refers to the evolution of these dedicated dive boats from bare-bones expedition vessels of the 1960s that offered great diving but a rugged life of hard bunks, C-ration food and toilets that . . . well, never mind. In contrast, today's luxury boats are mini-Princess cruisers with air-conditioned private suites, valet service, gourmet meals, wine lists and, of course, great diving.

DIVE OPERATORS WORLDWIDE

ABCs/ARUBA

Aruba is a darling of the sun-and-sandals crowd, and for good reason—it pushes all the right tourist hot buttons: luxury high-rises with jacuzzi and a private swatch of cuddly white beach, bathtub-warm turquoise waters by day, glittering casinos by night.

Now for the surprise: Aruba's collection of nearshore wrecks earned it a near-tie with Bermuda for best wreck diving in this year's Readers' Choice Awards. An aggressive artificial reef program has put this most Spanish and independent of the Netherlands Antilles islands back on the dive atlas, with enough wrecks—shallow and deep, small and monolithic—to fill your dance card for the better part of a week. Then it's time for the jacuzzi.

► WEATHER: Dry and sunny year-round. Rarely below 75F in winter or above 85F in summer. Constant trade winds lower humidity and blow pests away.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: As stable as the weather: 80F in summer with some dips to 75F in winter.

► VISIBILITY: Depending on currents and plankton, ranges from 50 to 100 feet.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: The Pilot Boat at 90 feet is home to morays peering from port-holes and a school of mutinous glassy sweepers occupying the wheelhouse. The German freighter Antilla—which sank more than 50 years ago—is now a high-rise coral condominium. The Jane Sea is a spooky 250-foot freighter sailing the ocean's bottom.

ABCs/BONAIRE

Cap'n Don—that embodiment of Bonaire diving—coined the operative phrase for this boot-shaped island off Venezuela's coast: "Diving Freedom." Here's the deal: Anytime you want it, 24 hours a day, the reef awaits. Down here you're among friends. As the official license plates say, "Divers' Paradise."

And Bonaireans intend to keep it that way. One of the Caribbean's oldest and most effective marine parks protects the coral reefs that ring all of Bonaire and are, quite literally, just a giant-stride from shore. You can relax on a five-minute boat ride or take advantage of the unlimited shore diving option offered by resorts here. Throw some tanks in the back of your rental Jeep and head out to the 60-plus sites marked, mapped and reserved for divers only. Naturally, Bonaire earned "world's best shore diving" honors in this year's Readers' Choice Awards.

► WEATHER: Dry and sunny year-round. Temperatures rarely below 75F in winter or above 85F in summer. Trade winds lower humidity and blow away most winged pests.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Matches the weather: 80F in summer, with an occasional dip to 75F in winter.

► VISIBILITY: Depending on currents and plankton, from 60 to 100 feet; occasionally more in summer.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Around nearby Klein Bonaire, a tiny deserted island, are 24 primal sites. Washington-Slagbaai Park is one of the Caribbean's largest wilderness areas and offers advanced shore diving. On the northwest coast, Rappel and Karpata are monuments to hearty hard corals and prime seahorse pastures.

ABCs/CURAÇAO

Curaçao is the definitive Dutch vacation isle, and the capital city of Willemstad is the center of power, population, commerce and nightlife in the Netherlands Antilles.

Divers have come to know the island apart from its association with sister islands Aruba and Bonaire, and for good reason. Along the leeward west coast of the island are shallow reefs that yield to a gradual reef slope and, eventually, sheer drop-offs. Scattered among the reefs are numerous shipwrecks and much of the island's lush reefs fall under the protection of a marine park. You can reach many of Curaçao's dive sites from shore, but visiting divers should always be wary of currents that run along the shoreline.

► WEATHER: Dry and sunny year-round, with temperatures rarely falling below 75F in the winter or rising above 85F in the summer.

AUSTRALIA

If all the fabled "land down under" had to offer was the Great Barrier Reef, it would still be the most overwhelming dive destination not only in the Pacific, but on the planet. With 2,900 separate reef systems interwoven into a 1,200-mile-long factory of biodiversity, the reef that stretches along the country's east coast swells with diversity: 1,500 species of fish, 4,000 types of mollusks, 400 species of hard and soft corals—at last count. And there are 1,200 shipwrecks to explore, some dating back to the 17th century.

But there's more to Aussie land than just the GBR. Just a day's sail east of the reef is the fabled Coral Sea, where subsea mountains called bommies explode with their own fantastical profusions of life. From Australia's south coast, there are great white shark expeditions where divers can go mask-to-nose with the shark we love to fear. And on the West Coast, you can swim with whale sharks, the gentle giants we just love, period.

► WEATHER: Australian weather patterns are opposite of those in North America. Summer runs from December to February, and winter runs from June through August. The Tropic of Capricorn cuts across through the country just north of Heron Island. In the north, daytime temperatures range from the 80Fs in winter to the 90Fs with high humidity in summer. In the south, winter temps range from the

BAHAMAS

You can do it all in the Bahamas: make guaranteed shark and dolphin dives, glide through shallow coral gardens, scale deep walls, explore shipwrecks old and new, and marvel at the limestone architecture of caverns, sinks and mysterious blue holes. The 700 limestone islands and cays that make up this island nation are scattered across 90,000 square miles of the Atlantic, but they start just 55 miles east of Fort Lauderdale.

If you aren't hopping from island to island by live-aboard, decide ahead of time what you want in the way of topside amenities. The major tourist islands of New Providence, Paradise Island and Freeport have plenty of casinos, golf courses and posh hotels to choose from, while the Out Islands (the Abacos, Andros, Bimini, Cat Island, Crooked Island, the Exumas, Harbour Island, Long Island and San Salvador) are laid-back and rustic.

► WEATHER: From December to May, temperatures average 60F to 75F, while summer temps average 80F to 85F. Summer is the season of flat seas and bright sun. While winter storm fronts make ideal conditions less predictable, these storms pass quickly and conditions soon return to normal.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Winter water temps stay in the 70Fs while summer temps peak in the high 80Fs.

► VISIBILITY: With no runoff, vis is usually a consistent 100 to 150 feet with peaks of 200 feet.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Shark diving is offered on many islands and in many different forms. Some dive operators even let the customer do the feeding. The Blue Hole off Andros is one of the largest of the mysterious limestone caverns and features three different levels. The Current Cut off Harbour Island is an 8- to 12-knot thrill ride that will change your concept of drift diving.

Earl...
Huh, ...what?

You looked a million miles away...

Yeah, I was just think'n about diving in the Bahamas, most of the guys are going next week with me?

I can tell, no one's getting any work done.

I want to do the Nitrox Course. I heard you can dive safer, longer. They've been training nitrox since '91 and have a lot of experience. I like that idea. Then we're all going to dive off the WALL together. It's amazing, like jumping off the Grand Canyon.

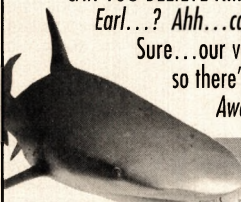

You going to do the shark thing?

You mean SHARK ALLEY. YES!

CAN YOU BELIEVE IT...

Earl...? Ahh...can I come too?

Sure...our villas sleeps four, so there's room for everyone. Awesome!

Ask about our great seasonal specials! Fun packages that let you bring a friend for half price!

BERMUDA

Bermuda is for wreck lovers. Since it was first settled by the shipwrecked crew of the English flagship Sea Venture in 1609, the island chain's history has been entangled with maritime trade and warfare. In the past four centuries, hundreds of vessels have fallen victim to the "Devil's Isle," creating a collection of natural shipwrecks nearly unparalleled in the world.

The northernmost coral reefs in the western hemisphere encircle this hook-shaped spit of land and support a wide array of tropical marine life and a few endemic species like the bizarre Bermuda halfbeak. Located 650 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, N.C., Bermuda is just a two-hour flight from New York City, which makes it a perfect getaway for divers who want a quick dose of nitrogen and a lesson in maritime history.

► WEATHER: Bermuda has two seasons: a May-to-November summer (85F during the day, in the 70Fs at night) and a spring-like winter from December to April (60Fs and 70Fs during the day, 50Fs and 60Fs at night).

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: From 75F to 85F in the summer; dipping to the mid-60Fs in winter.

► VISIBILITY: The Gulf Stream guarantees clear water; 70 to 100 feet of vis is normal, with an occasional 150-foot day.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: The wreck of the 200-foot, four-masted schooner Constellation, star of Peter Benchley's The Deep. The 385-foot Greek steamer Pelinaion, which lies at 70 feet, split in half by the reef. The easily penetrable wreck of the 165-foot steamer Hermes, sunk intentionally as an artificial reef in 1985.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

If warm, cobalt waters are the gold standard in the world of dive travel, what explains the popularity of British Columbia, Canada's west coast province?

The water is green, teeth-chattering cold, and unrestrained as it gusts through the narrow straits that separate Vancouver Island from the mainland at speeds up to 12 knots. But beneath the seemingly inhospitable waters is a multicolored riot of soft corals that outshine many Caribbean reefs. Add kelp gardens and a cast of impressive marine life including friendly wolf eels, giant Pacific octopuses, massive Puget Sound king crabs, killer whales, six-gill sharks, dolphins, salmon and sea lions, and you have reason enough for any curious diver to don a dry suit, time the tides, and sample some of the planet's best cold-water diving. On top of the natural wonders, the region also features two intact Canadian destroyers sunk as artificial reefs, and a third warship scheduled to go down this June.

► WEATHER: Diving offered year-round. Summers are warm and mostly dry; winters are cool and wet.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Water temperatures stay in the mid-40Fs year-round but surface temperatures may reach 55F to 60F in the summer.

► VISIBILITY: Affected by plankton blooms, visibility averages 30 to 60 feet in the summer and 70 to 100 feet in winter.

BRITISH VIRGIN ISLANDS

This collection of 50-plus volcanic islands sits atop a shallow subsea shelf that stretches 60 miles east from Puerto Rico. Between the scruffy rocky islets, white billows of sails float dreamlike above the antique blue of Sir Francis Drake Channel. And that's it: No mass tourism on these secluded islands, and the laid-back Brits intend to keep it that way.

Diving in the BVIs doesn't mean drop-off drama, but it does offer understated thrills, like the islands themselves. Sudden caves and lava tubes, light-filled coral grottoes, a string of open-ocean pinnacles, and a maze of ledges coated with red and orange encrusting sponges that burst forth like a Crayola meltdown will have you saying "brill"—that's slang for rather awesome, dude.

► WEATHER: Expect 75F to 85F daytime temperatures, depending on the season. Warm days cooled by trade winds at night.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: 75F to 79F in winter; 78F to 80F in summer.

► VISIBILITY: A dependable 60 to 100 feet, with best vis around smaller islands, pinnacles and seamounts.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: One of the Caribbean's premier wrecks is also one of its oldest—the RMS Rhone has become a coral spawning ground since its sinking in 1867 and is now dripping with life. The Chikuzen provides open-ocean drama, a Pelagic Grand Central that also features schools of barracudas and gray snappers. Carrot Shoal, between Peter and Norman Islands, is a night-dive favorite, with nurse sharks, permits and guaranteed turtles.

CALIFORNIA

Along its 800 miles of coastline, the Golden State offers not only one of the world's richest marine ecosystems, but also one of the most diverse. From the craggy cliffs of Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary in the north, to the seamounts and pinnacles of the Channel Islands archipelago in the south, California is a mecca for underwater photographers, game hunters, whale watchers and that strange breed of diver who likes to get inside aluminum cages and invite great whites to try to eat them.

Sure, you've got your big stuff—dolphins, sharks, sea lions and migrating blue whales—but you've also got your macro stuff—a kaleidoscope world of hydrocorals, sea stars, anemones and 160 brands of nudibranchs. In between, flitting among the magic vines of California's kelp forests, are the game boys—lingcod, sheephead, cabezon—and those tiny explosions of orange called garibaldi. Here's testimony that great diving doesn't always mean bathtub warm. Who needs that when you're nose-to-nose with a wolf eel?

► WEATHER: Check The Weather Channel. The long coast offers widely varying and sometimes unpredictable conditions.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP:

Low to mid-50Fs in northern and central regions; low to high 60Fs in Southern California.

► VISIBILITY:

Varies depending on location, seasonal variations and weather. Count on average vis of 50 feet offshore, 20 feet near-shore. Days of 100-foot clarity possible.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Grab your tool: Beneath the canopies of bull and palm kelp of Mendocino, some of California's largest abalone hide on the boulder bottom of Noyo Cove. Site of our nation's largest marine sanctuary, Monterey Peninsula offers towering kelp forests, rocky reefs, sandy seafloors and marine life on a grand scale, from gaudy one-inch nudibranchs to the deep-blue gods—migrating whales. In the Channel Islands, let one of the L.A.-area's day boats ferry you to the sea lion rookery of Santa Barbara or the blue-water pelagics of San Clemente.

CAYMAN ISLANDS

Some of the biggest winners in this year's Readers' Choice Awards were these small islands. The Caymans—especially Little Cayman—took top honors in the Caribbean in a host of categories: best fish life, healthiest reefs, best wall diving and best overall destination. The reasons why are as clear as the waters that surround these three British islands: the festooned walls of the submerged Sierra Maestra mountains, whose exposed tips provide dry land, and whose steep flanks make alpine divers of us all.

Grand Cayman is the granddaddy of

CENTRAL AMERICA BAY ISLANDS, HONDURAS

In Roatan, there's one paved road that twists around the island's steep flanks. And that's it—the only road in all of the Bay Islands, a string of 65 subsea outcroppings surrounded by coral reefs. Together these islands are home to the greatest diversity of coral, sponge and invertebrate species in the Caribbean.

► WEATHER: Mild year-round; rarely above 90F in summer or below 75F in winter.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Varies from 78F in winter to 82F in summer.

► VISIBILITY: Windward reefs sometimes subject to current clouding; otherwise an average of 80 feet.

BELIZE

The Central American coastline between Mexico and Guatemala is protected by a 185-mile-long barrier reef, second longest in the world. In the north, Ambergris Caye is home to a clutch of popular diving resorts. Outside the barrier reef are three coral atolls—Lighthouse, Glover's Reef and Turneffe Island—that are isolated getaways. Inside the less-visited southern end of the reef is a rare faro reef system.

► WEATHER: Mild year-round, with temperatures rarely higher than 90F in the summer or below 75F in winter.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Varies from 78F in the winter to 82F in the summer.

► VISIBILITY: Offshore waters offer 100 feet of visibility or better in the late spring and summer, although plankton and storms can lower visibility on the atolls to 50 feet or less.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Deep divers will love the rocky interior of the Great Blue Hole inside Lighthouse Reef. Northern Reef Drop-off is a virgin wall on the southern end of the barrier reef that starts at 40 feet and drops to 3,000. Grouper Gulley off Glover's Reef is home to lazy nurse sharks, playful sea turtles and massive grouper. peratures rarely exceeding 90F in summer or dipping below 75F in winter.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Dependably constant, from 78F in winter to 82F in summer.

► VISIBILITY: Windward reefs sometimes subject to clouding from currents; otherwise, an average of 80 feet.

Eastern Caribbean

EASTERN CARIBBEAN

Good things come in small packages, and in the Eastern Caribbean, small-package islands form a gentle curve of good things that reaches from the Virgin Islands all the way to Venezuela. Each island offers its own version of the travel-brochure ideal: white-sand beaches, tropical rain forests, plunging waterfalls and five-star resorts.

At least three of the islands—Saba, Dominica and Tobago—have gained some notoriety as divers' islands: Saba for its pinnacles and drop-offs, Dominica for its volcano crater and walls, and Tobago for its manta rays. But lesser known are the offshore treasures of islands like St. Kitts and Nevis, Barbados, Anguilla, and St. Vincent and the Grenadines.

fect year-round, rarely dipping much below 70F in the winter or heating up much above 90F in the summer. Sometimes cool at night, especially in higher elevations of mountainous islands. Tropical showers can be expected throughout the year.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Comfortable year-round, averaging 78F in the winter and 82F in the summer.

► VISIBILITY: Excellent throughout the chain. Expect 80 to 100 feet in most places, though runoff from rivers on some islands can muddy the waters.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Barbados may be best-known for its beaches and resorts, but the 360-foot Stavronikita off Bridgetown is a world-class wreck dive that deserves some attention of its own. At Champagne, a one-of-a-kind dive site off Dominica, hot water bubbles out of the reef to create a natural jacuzzi. Caves, overhangs, deep-water gorgonians and big fish make Saba's Shark Shoal one of the most photogenic dive sites in the region, even when the big boys are a no-show.

FIJI

If you want to dive in the waters of Fiji's Kadavu Islands, be prepared to drink some kava. To gain access to these reefs, it's still customary to share with a local chief a bowl of the bitter grog made from the root of the yaqona tree. Some kava drinkers experience a narcotic high and most report numbness of the lips, but it's a small price to pay to dive some of the most beautiful reefs in the South Pacific.

Fiji is often called the soft coral capital of the world, thanks to its signature species, the translucent Dendronephthya klunzingeri. The island chain's barrier reefs and coral atolls also support 400 other species of hard and soft corals, gobs of invertebrate life and some of the richest and most photogenic fish life in the world, including the tomato clownfish, the lemon-peel angelfish and the latticed butterflyfish.

► WEATHER:

Favorable dive conditions can be expected from March to December, with the calmest seas in April and May. January and February are iffy, offering the warmest temperatures, but also the greatest amount of rainfall.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: From a low of 75F in the coolest months (June to October) to a high of 84F in January and February.

► VISIBILITY: Expect triple-digit vis during the coolest months (June to October). Plankton blooms and rainfall can lower visibility from November to February.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Fed by the current flowing through Somo Somo Strait, the blanket of white soft corals that give the Great White Wall its name also make it one of the most spectacular dive sites in the world. Giant Maori wrasse prowl the deep coral chasms that cut through North Astrolabe Reef. Expect eight-foot sea fans and gray reef sharks in Frigate Passage, on the southwest corner of Beqa's barrier reef.

FLORIDA

Although retirees have laid claim to huge portions of the Sunshine State, its waters still belong to divers. From the crystal-clear freshwater of the state's inland springs to the fish-filled waters that cover the only coral reef tract in the continental United States, divers find plenty to call their own.

Off Panama City and Pensacola in the state's Panhandle, you'll find the results of one of the most active artificial reef programs in the country. In north-central Florida, the springs offer boat-free diving year-round. The Gold Coast in the southeast is home to limestone ledges and world-class wrecks. And the Keys continue to reign as the most accessible, most visited dive destination in the world.

Reader Ratings Florida Keys

Reader Ratings Southeast Florida

► WEATHER: Mild year-round in the south, more temperate in the north. Summers are hot and humid across the state.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Upper 70Fs to low 80Fs in summer; winter temps vary by location, from lower 70Fs in the Keys to mid-50Fs in the north. Springs are a constant 72F year-round.

► VISIBILITY: Springs can be 200 feet-plus; ocean waters vary by season and location. Vis in the Keys averages 50 to 80 feet, but can reach triple digits on calm days.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Manatees and divers converge on Crystal River for winter meetings every year. Baitfish and barracudas hang out on Broward County's wreck of the 198-foot freighter Mercedes I. The largest schools of fish in the Keys gather at Molasses Reef, possibly the most popular dive site in the world.

HAWAII

In this land of perpetual summer, more than 100 dive operators have set up shop on the four major islands: Hawaii, Maui, Oahu and Kauai. They do a brisk business whisking divers to the area's signature lava tubes and caverns, ocean pinnacles, drop-offs and reefs.

But it's the amazing variety of marine life that makes this rugged volcanic seascape come alive. Because the Hawaiian Islands are one of the most geographically isolated spots on Earth, a stunning 30 percent of marine creatures are endemic, including several species of scorpion and lionfish. Add in the variety of diving—from beginner to advanced, shore diving to drift—and you understand why this is one of the most visited destinations in the Pacific.

► WEATHER: Warm with cooling trade winds. September is the hottest month, but temperatures vary little year-round, averaging 68F to 83F. November to March is the rainy season.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Winter and spring, mid- to high 70Fs; summer and fall, low 80Fs.

► VISIBILITY: Generally excellent, although it varies from island to island. Often exceeds 100 feet.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: The floodlights of Hawaii's Kona Surf Hotel attract schools of manta rays for an experience that is one part night dive, two parts ballet. The crescent ridge of Molokini Crater breaks the surface to create a bay-like entrance that acts as a marine preserve on one side and provides a dramatic wall dive on the other—when conditions and your skills allow. At Oahu's Twin Caves, a favorite advanced dive, two vertical lava tubes accompany a stomach-churning wall covered with nudibranchs of outrageous hues and lineage.

LIVE-ABOARD

KONA AGGRESSOR II

INDIAN OCEAN/RED SEA

The narrow, nearly landlocked Red Sea gets deep very close to shore. For reef-dwelling creatures who want to survive, that means crowding near the surface. For divers seeking lush, overabundant reefs, that's good news. Most Red Sea dive operations are clustered in the north—in the Gulf of Aqaba at Eilat, Israel, and on Egypt's Sinai Peninsula and Hurghada on the west coast of the Red Sea.

In the Indian Ocean, two island groups attract divers: the Seychelles and the Maldives. The Seychelles' claim to fame is one-of-a-kind endemic species. The Maldives, off the southern tip of India, feature gorgeous shallow reefs and fast currents.

► WEATHER: The Red Sea is surrounded by desert; be prepared for baking temperatures of 100F or more. The Indian Ocean is affected by seasonal monsoons.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: The Indian Ocean around the Maldives and Seychelles is warm year-round. In the Red Sea, temps range from the low 70Fs in winter to the low 80Fs in summer.

► VISIBILITY: Excellent in the Red Sea and Indian Ocean, though localized plankton blooms in the Red Sea can cut vis to 30 feet in places.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: On Ras Muhammed Wall at the tip of the Sinai Peninsula, you'll find a kaleidoscopic array of small tropicals as well as jacks, tuna and sharks cruising in from the deep. Dive five shipwrecks at a single site: Abu Nahas off Hurghada. From July to December, mantas come to breed at Manta Point in the Maldives' Kaafu Atoll.

JAMAICA

Better known as the home of reggae and Red Stripe, Jamaica doesn't get full credit for its diving. Surrounding the island is a shallow plateau of corals, and running along the north shore is a 145-mile wall that drops into the Cayman Trench. Both are populated with an outrageous array of sponges and tropicals that attract vacationers and scientists alike.

If Jamaican diving has a reputation for being tame, it's due to the number of all-inclusive resorts that pamper guests. But adventure divers can find plenty of thrills diving remote sinks and rivers, or through the tangled roots of mangrove swamps where the crocodile is king.

► WEATHER: Winter daytime temperatures range between 76F and 86F, but soar into the 90Fs in summer. Expect brief showers during the early fall and spring.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Mid-70Fs in winter and mid-80Fs in summer.

► VISIBILITY: Averages 60 to 100 feet but can reach 150 feet in the summer.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Adventurous divers drink deeply at God's Well, a limestone sinkhole that spirals down to 158 feet. Devil's Reef off Ocho Rios is a steep coral pinnacle rising from 200 feet, sprouting dreadlocks of black coral and colorful sponges. The Arena off Montego Bay features twin tunnels and the remains of a Spanish shipwreck encrusted into the coral wall.

Reader Ratings Jamaica

MEXICO

In all the Americas, few countries offer the diversity of diving that Mexico does. The coastline of the Yucatan Peninsula is rich with Mayan history and Caribbean reefs. The drift diving off Cozumel, one of the most popular dive destinations outside the United States, is some of the world's best. Isla Mujeres and the mainland touristopolis of Cancun have excellent wrecks and fish-stuffed shallow reefs, while cave and cavern divers trek to Akumal to explore cenotes and caves carved by the relentless flow of water through limestone.

On the Pacific coast, the rocky underwater terrain of pinnacles and seamounts lacks the color of Caribbean reefs, but attracts a variety of big marine life from yellowfin tuna to manta rays, gray whales and hammerhead sharks. Travelers seeking these wild encounters most often head to the Sea of Cortez by way of the Baja Peninsula and its well-known dive centers, La Paz and Cabo San Lucas. But adventurous divers will also find a warm welcome and year-round diving in the mainland coastal towns of San Carlos, Mazatlan, Puerto Vallarta, Mazanillo and Ixtapa.

► WEATHER: The Yucatan averages 200 days of sunshine a year with temperatures ranging from 75F in winter to 85F in summer. Mexico's Pacific coast has hot, balmy summers with highs in the 90Fs and winters where temperatures range from the 60Fs at night to 80Fs during the day.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Mid-80Fs in summer and mid-70Fs in winter for the Yucatan; mid-80Fs in summer and mid-60Fs in winter on the Pacific coast.

seamount, located nine miles off La Paz in the Sea of Cortez, is a congregation of three pinnacles that attracts schooling hammerhead sharks and curious divers.

► VISIBILITY: Yucatan visibility averages 150 feet or greater year-round, while Pacific coast vis fluctuates from 70 feet in summer to 90 feet in winter.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: The tunnels and deep swim-throughs at Cozumel's Punta Sur offer a glimpse inside towering coral heads and a chance to spy on snoozing nurse sharks. Get your adrenaline flowing even before you touch water by making the 15-foot free-fall into the Temple of Doom cenote near Akumal. El Bajo

THE BEST OF COZUMEL Topside Diversions

Most Cozumel veterans can recall a few loud nights at Carlos 'n Charlie's—Cozumel's most raucous night spot. But they also know that evening entertainment runs the gamut from quiet dinners at La Chozza to Monday night football at the Sports Bar to native dances in the town square. Here are some other choices for topside entertainment on Mexico's largest Caribbean island.

► Stroll the Mayan ruins of San Gervasio—believed to be the ceremonial grounds of Ixchel, the goddess of childbirth and fertility. Admission: $4.50.

► Climb Point Celerain Lighthouse. The panoramic view of the island is well worth the $1 the lighthouse keeper charges for the privilege. On Sunday afternoons, he serves up fried fish and beer to beachgoers.

► The Museum of Cozumel tells you everything you want to know about the island's cultural and natural history. Admission: $3.

WHAT DOES FOUR BUCKS GET YOU AT CHANKANAAB? A STROLL ON THE BEACH, A WALK THROUGH BOTANICAL GARDENS AND A GLIMPSE OF CHRIST.

► Chankanaab National Park is the perfect place to spend an afternoon beach lounging, touring the botanical gardens or snorkeling out to the submerged Christ statue. Admission: $4.

► Weekend festivals in the central town square are free and feature live music, plenty of local contact, and lots of street vendors.

► The Mexican Rodeo Show at the Cozumel Arena on Wednesday nights is family-style fun with singing cowboys, dancing horses, and a bloodless exhibition bullfight. Admission: $15.

Experts Only

BRING YOUR LOGBOOK, YOUR SKILLS AND YOUR NERVE.

Cozumel is famous for effortless drift diving above the Stygian void of Palancar Reef, among the sponge vines of Santa Rosa Wall, and past the Volkswagen-sized grouper of Cedar Pass. But if you're up for a challenge, ask your divemaster about these advanced spots. When you do, be prepared to produce your logbook and have your diving skills scrutinized before a divemaster agrees to take you there.

Barracuda Reef

DEPTH: 70-80 feet

SKILL LEVEL: Expert

CURRENT: Very strong, unpredictable

Along the flat, strip reefs bordering the sand flats north of San Miguel, the predictable south-north current can eddy into unpredictable flows, even swirling into down currents. The namesake silver fish and schools of jacks are common. You might even glimpse a gray reef shark, green turtles or eagle rays.

Punta Sur

DEPTH: 80-130+ feet

SKILL LEVEL: Advanced to Expert

CURRENT: Strong

Tunnels take you inside the reef to cavernous ballrooms decorated in sponges. Nurse sharks nap on the sandy floors and eagle rays cruise the open water of the Cozumel Channel. Just by sure to keep your fins high and an eye on your tank pressure.

Maracaibo Deep

DEPTH: 90-130+ feet

SKILL LEVEL: Advanced to Expert

CURRENT: Strong

The wall starts at about 90 feet, but you drop down to 130 feet for a drift past plate corals, deep-water gorgonians, elephant ear sponges and bushy tufts of black coral. Keep an eye on the open water for those hard-to-find pelagics including reef sharks, manta rays and loggerhead turtles.

El Isote

DEPTH: 40-60 feet

SKILL LEVEL: Expert

CURRENT: Strong

Divers with professional scuba skills can ride the currents from the Maracaibo shallows around the southern tip of the island to pristine, next-to-virgin strips of reef running perpendicular to shore. Just be prepared for brisk currents and plenty of chop.

TTC COZUMEL DIVING

PACIFIC

Palau, Truk, Yap, Sipadan—the names of these perennial dive favorites are as familiar to most divers as the names of their own dive buddies. Less well-known are the hot-ticket dive destinations of the next century—places like Thailand's Similan Islands, the Philippines' Tubbataha Reefs and Indonesia's Nusa Penida.

The vast majority of potential diving in the Pacific remains untapped. If you hope to dive even a fraction of what the largest of our oceans offers, pack your dive bag and buy a plane ticket now. Start with Truk Lagoon and the greatest collection of World War II wrecks in the world. Dive with the mantas of Yap, the turtles of Sipadan and the sharks of Rangiroa. Then try Palau, Papua New Guinea, Pohnpei or Phuket.

Having a choice is always great. That's what you get when you dive the Mexican Yucatan corridor with Mike Madden's CEDAM dive center. Cedam now offers direct boat trips to some of the best of Cozumel's walls along with great local reef diving. But the real adventure lies in the jungle, at the mouth of crystal clear fresh water "cenotes". It's a diving experience you'll never forget.

There is a variety of diving options with only one real choice for safety, experience, fun, and adventure.

So much diving, so little time.

► WEATHER: Throughout the region, temperatures range from warm (65F) to hot (95F) year-round, though constant sea breezes moderate the heat on most islands. Wet and dry seasons vary throughout the region, with most of the rain and monsoons falling from October to April.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: 78F to 83F except where deep-water currents bring cold upwellings.

► VISIBILITY: Excellent; in the 100- to 150-foot range except where runoff from rivers empties into the ocean.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: The incoming tide attracts little fish, big fish, sharks and divers to Palau's signature dive, Blue Corner. At night, a galaxy of flashlightfish illuminate Marigondon Cave off the Philippines' Mactan Island. In 1883, the volcano known as Krakatau erupted, killing 36,000 people. Today, you can dive the rock tunnels of the collapsed caldera off Java.

Micronesian immersion:

(noun)

1. the act of plunging into Micronesia's pristine waters where the action is electric, the wild life remains wild, wrecked ships become grand reefs and tiny organisms create unimaginable colors.
2. a preoccupation with Micronesia's mural of brilliant sunsets, untamed landscape, open-hearted people and layers of history within its legends, traditional houses, ancient dances, massive ruins and remnants from wars past.

PUERTO RICO

For some reason, Puerto Rico has yet to be discovered by the majority of American divers. The good news for you is that there's no logical reason for this. Puerto Rico offers easy access: dozens of daily flights from major cities. It offers culture: nonstop nightlife, excellent restaurants and the fortress of El Morro in old San Juan. And it offers top-side diversity: from the El Yunque rain forest in the east to the cave-riddled karst of the northwest to the dry, rolling hills in the southwest.

And better yet, it offers world-class diving. Off San Juan, coral gardens reach toward the neighboring U.S. Virgin Islands. On the southwest side of the island, the Parguera Wall stretches 20 miles and drops precipitously from an average depth of 65 feet to more than 600 feet. And a collection of offshore islands—including Mona Island, known as "the Galapagos of the Caribbean"—offers acres of pristine reefs.

► WEATHER: Fairly stable all year, with an average temperature of 76F. Rainfall varies by location.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: From a low of 77F in winter to a high of 84F in summer.

► VISIBILITY: Nearshore, visibility averages 60 to 75 feet. Offshore, visibility improves, reaching triple digits in some places.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Black Wall,

where huge sea fans and bushy black coral trees hang off the reef face, is part of the Parguera Wall. Palominos, off Fajardo on the east end, attracts spotted eagle rays and hawksbill turtles. On Vieques Island, don't miss phosphorescent Mosquito Bay, where every night dive becomes an underwater fireworks show.

SOUTH AMERICA/ BRAZIL

With 4,600 miles of coastline, Brazil offers as much diving diversity as you'd expect in a country that's larger than all other South American nations combined. And in the world's eighth-largest economy, Brazil's youthful population, 70 percent of whom live by the sea, have made scuba diving one of the fastest growing sports in the land of Carnival and bodies beautiful.

► WEATHER: Tropical, except in the extreme southern states.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: A warm 80F in Fernando de Noronha and Recife in the north; expect thermoclines to 60F in the south around Angra dos Reis.

► VISIBILITY: Dependable 70 to 100 feet in Noronha. Elsewhere, vis varies from 35 to 100 feet, according to distance from shore and currents.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Linger outside the off-limits Bay of Dolphins in Noronha and watch an army of 600 spinner dolphins pass under you. Sit on the bottom at Laje dos Dois Irmaos and watch 30 to 40 juvenile sharks swim around you in this unique breeding area. Shine your light on the steamship de Baixo off Recife and watch it burst into a ball of orange flame crawling with hundreds—yes, hundreds—of lobsters.

Venezuela

SOUTH AMERICA/ VENEZUELA

Dive atlas update: Please add the country that claims more Caribbean coastline and islands than any other—Venezuela. Its 1,750-mile-long north coast fronts the Caribbean Sea like a white ribbon, and its 72 major islands stretch from Bonaire in the west to Trinidad and Tobago in the east. Along the way are several major diving areas as different from one another as the samba is from a barn dance.

► WEATHER: Between 75F and 80F, except in summer when they nudge 100F and in winter when they fall to the mid-50Fs.

► AVERAGE WATER TEMP: In Los Roques, expect 80F in summer and mid-70Fs in winter. Los Testigos and Los Frailes temps stay in mid-70Fs even in summer.

► VISIBILITY: Varies from an eye-popping 200 feet in Los Roques, to a hazy 30 to 50 feet in the nutrient-rich waters of Los Testigos.

► THREE GREAT DIVES: Los Testigos' Cumberland Bank is a shallow feeding ground for schools of sharks, barracudas and stingrays. The infestation of groupers at Los Roque's Piedra de Guasa is testimony to the marine park's effectiveness. At Los Frailes' Cominoto, schools of balloonfish hide in gorgonia trees.

Providenciales is the most developed of the eight inhabited islands, boasting a number of new hotels and a small casino. But you can still explore the wild side of the Turks & Caicos in the shallow spur-and-groove formations of Grace Bay, the deep wall of the Caicos Passage on Provo's Northwest Point and on day trips to the uninhabited islands of West Caicos and French Cay. On Grand Turk, where the wall is tantalizingly visible just 300 yards from shore, outboard skiffs wing divers to their favorite wall sites in a matter of minutes. Sparsely populated Salt Cay, with only one guesthouse, has its own unspoiled wall sites and day trips to the remote island of Great Sand Cay.

Reader Ratings Turks & Caicos

- WEATHER: Mild year-round, with average daytime temperatures ranging from a low of 75F in winter to 90F in summer.
- AVERAGE WATER TEMP: Around 80F in summer and a few degrees less in winter.
- VISIBILITY: Variable, depending on the amount of plankton in the water, but there are plenty of days with 100 feet or more.
- THREE GREAT DIVES: Provo's Chimney is a 30-foot vertical drop through a shaft formed by plate corals. Carry a light with you to Grand Turk's Black Forest to coax out the true colors of the five varieties of black coral. The massive anchors and chains of the HMS Endymion—accessible from Salt Cay—are scattered amid healthy coral slopes.

numerous duty-free shops and resorts catering to divers who like bargain-hunting as much as fish-watching. Divers and sailors seeking seclusion enjoy tiny St. John, where most of the island has been declared a national park. St. Croix is the island of choice for divers looking to max out their bottom time. # UNEXSO

CELEBRATING 30 YEARS OF DIVING ADVENTURE

Q: How many dive resorts in the world can point to 30 years of continuous operation? Answer: You can count them on one hand—and not use all of your fingers. The Underwater Explorers Society opened their doors in 1965 on Grand Bahama Island. Back then, its concept was bold and innovative: a resort dedicated to scuba diving. UNEXSO was the world's first.

Designed as a place where divers could feel they belong, UNEXSO promoted underwater exploration and adventure. That same vision drives UNEXSO today: UNEXSO is now the one destination for reef, shark, dolphin and shipwreck diving.

UNEXSO— INNOVATIONS IN DIVING AND DIVING ADVENTURE

► Over the last 30 years, UNEXSO has introduced many innovations that today divers take for granted. With its three-hour "resort course," UNEXSO extended "Try it, you'll like it" to diving. UNEXSO has introduced more than 60,000 people to scuba and developed the secondary air source, the octopus regulator. UNEXSO also pioneered organized night diving.

UNEXSO has created unique diving adventures and experiences: Theo's Wreck, a 230-foot steel freighter sunk as an artificial reef. The world-famous Dolphin Dive permits divers to interact in the open ocean with the friendly animals. The Dolphin Experience, where guests interact with dolphins and their trainers at the world's largest dolphin research facility. At UNEXSO, diving adventure is guaranteed.

UNEXSO TODAY ► This spring, UNEXSO introduced the Professional Shark Feeder Program. For students, the first step is learning feeding techniques, understanding shark behavior and training in use of the steel-mesh chainmail shark suits. Graduates then join the UNEXSO Shark Team in hand-feeding the sharp-toothed predators at Shark Junction. Cameras roll to document the action.

A major expansion project is underway to ready UNEXSO facilities for the next generation of adventure diving. The huge Freeport facility is being expanded, from 7,000 to 16,500 square feet. Pelican Bay is a new 48-room hotel that was designed with divers in mind. The waterfront resort is only a stone's throw from UNEXSO.

TRAINING —

A UNEXSO SPECIALTY ► UNEXSO is affiliated with PADI, NAUI and SSI. Options are resort courses, training from open water through divemaster, specialty courses and check-outs and referrals for certifications. UNEXSO pioneer Ben Rose teaches unique Marine ID courses that he's developed over the last 25 years. And UNEXSO's NACD Cavern Course includes dives in three blue holes.

BOOK IT ► UNEXSO offers two- to seven-night diving and accommodations packages with all major hotels and resorts on Grand Bahama, including the new Pelican Bay. Two-night packages start at $176 per person/double occupancy for the Bahamas Princess Resort and $214 for the Lucayan Beach Resort. The two-night packages include room and three boat dives. For reservations or information on other resort packages, phone UNEXSO: toll-free U.S./Canada at 1-800-992-DIVE or 954-351-9889. Fax (954) 351-9740.

Fantasy Island

TIME TRAVEL IS REALITY AT FANTASY ISLAND

Above: Groups stay small and boats stay roomy on Fantasy Island's fleet of five dive boats.

Now you can travel back in time for savings on a Bay Islands dive vacation. Fantasy Island is rolling back rates to 1989, when the resort opened. A week's package is $675 and includes diving, accommodations, all meals and Fantasy Island's famed luxury and hospitality.

FANTASY DIVING IS A REALITY ►

Fly over the private island in an airplane and you'll appreciate why the resort is a diver's fantasy. Stunning reefs and drop-offs fringe the property, just a few fin kicks from the shore-diving gazebo. From the resort on the south shore, a private road crosses the island to the lagoon that's home to Fantasy Island's north shore dive base. In four minutes, a comfortable van transports guests and their gear from the resort to the north shore docks. During a typical week, guests enjoy scheduled boat dives off both the south and north coasts of the island, a rarity at other resorts. Guests can expect to make 22 to 24 dives during their stay, including three boat trips daily, night dives and unlimited shore diving.

The scuba center at Fantasy Island is a large, modern facility with six roomy, island-built custom dive boats. Everything a diver needs is conveniently located dockside: boats, dive shop, equipment rentals, sign-up board, rinse bins and wet storage. If you're hankering to do some shore diving day or night, just phone or visit the diver center—the staff will deliver your tanks and equipment to the dive gazebo. The Fantasy Island dive center also offers the complete range of SSI and PADI courses and instruction.

LUXURY, COMFORT AND GREAT FOOD ►

Fantasy Island Beach Resort established the standard in the Bay Islands for modern luxury and amenities. The resort is the only one on Roatan with air-conditioned interiors throughout. Brisk trade winds cool the Bay Islands, but it's a touch of luxury to retreat to air-conditioning whenever the needle of your personal thermostat creeps into the red. Fantasy Island takes good care of your stomach, too: the resort's restaurant ranked number two in the world in the 1996 Rodale's Scuba Diving Reader's Choice Awards. Guests appreciate a wide range of continental, Central American and island specialties.

The carpeted guest rooms at Fantasy Island are the picture of modern tropical comfort. The oceanfront rooms in the divers' wing—closest to the scuba center—feature air-conditioning, ceiling fan, 21-channel satellite TV, full bath, balcony and telephone. The larger beachfront rooms in the deluxe guest wing offer more amenities, including refrigerator, coffee maker, hair dryer and bigger bath.

Fantasy Island offers other amenities to make your Bay Islands vacation a delight: their own VIP Lounge and hostess at Roatan's new, modern airport. Beach pavilion and bar. Disco. Freshwater pool. Two lighted tennis courts. Room service. Watersports facility complete with sailboats, Hobie Cats, windsurfers, Jet Skis, sea kayaks, canoes, water skis and speed boats. Travel desk for mangrove, island and mainland expeditions. Car, moped and bicycle rentals. Complete marina. Conference rooms and facilities. Gift shop for snacks and vacation sundries.

BOOK IT ► Specials include diving, accommodations for a week, all meals, airport greeting and transfers. A package with accommodations in the divers' wing is $675. A package with beachfront accommodations is $875. (Specials are available for stays through June 11 and from September 15 to December 15.)

Air connections to Roatan are now easier than ever: Fly TACA into Roatan on weekends. Or daily fly TACA, Continental or American into San Pedro Sula, Honduras, or Belize. The new Caribbean Air now offers daily service to Roatan from San Pedro and from Belize City on weekends.

Call Fantasy Island at (800) 676-2826 or (813) 835-4449 for reservations, air connections and information.

Yucatanza™

COZUMEL'S MOTHER LODE FOR DIVERS

Longing to drift effortlessly along the world's most impressive coral walls? Feeling that irresistible urge to submerge in crystal-clear azure waters? Bored with watching reruns of Hoss and Little Joe on late-night cable? Then tune in to Yucatanza and ride into a Cozumel sunset with Tropical Tours.

You can hang up your aquatic spurs at your choice of two right friendly resorts: Casa Del Mar or La Ceiba. Both hotels feature the Del Mar Aquatics dive center on-property for convenience — no horse or other transportation required. At the dive center, divers find docks, freshwater showers, equipment rinse and wet storage right in the shop. There's no need to lug wet gear back to your room.

Casa Del Mar is a handsome, friendly resort that thousands of divers have come to appreciate as their Cozumel home-away-from-home. The resort features the outside Palapa restaurant and bar for swim-up service when you're cooling off in the pool.

La Ceiba is a superior class, full-service resort near Casa Del Mar. Amenities include restaurants and bars in the lobby and ocean front, boutique, photo shop, fitness center, sauna, tennis courts, adult pool and children's wading pool, travel and tour desk, car rental center and great shore diving and snorkeling. All rooms have a balcony and refrigerator with a servi-bar.

The comfortable, modern rooms at both Casa Del Mar and La Ceiba feature air-conditioning, phone, private bath and satellite TV with premium channels.

Both Yucatanza packages feature hotel accommodations, daily breakfast, 10% discounts on food and beverage per room, boat and shore diving, ground transfers, hotel taxes and a Yucatanza t-shirt. If your attitude is "don't fence me in, pardner," Tropical Tours includes a one-day car rental for exploring the island. For Casa Del Mar, five days runs $269 for September through December 20, 1996 and $305 for April 9, 1996 through June and includes three days of two-tank boat dives. The eight-day package includes five days of two-tank boat dives and costs $429 for September through December 20, 1996 and $499 for April 9, 1996 through June. For La Ceiba, five days runs $309 for September through December 20, 1996 and $359 for April 9, 1996 through June and includes three days of two-tank boat dives. The eight-day package includes five days of two-tank boat dives and costs $499 for September through December 20, 1996 and $599 for April 9, 1996 through June.

BOOK IT ► When you call Tropical Tours, you speak to divers. And they go beyond "one-size-fits-all": the experts customize itineraries. Tropical Tours features an impressive line-up of destinations throughout the Caribbean and Central America: Cozumel, Cancun, the

Fish 'N' Fins

PALAU'S PREMIER DIVE CENTER

Fish 'N' Fins fleet takes guests to the best diving sites in Palau—the top diving destination in the world according to Rodale readers.

Palau has dozens of extraordinary dive sites—all visited by most local operators. But in Palau, just knowing where the sites are does not necessarily guarantee great diving. The real trick is knowing the whims and ways of the sea, which dictate, to those who know its language, when to put divers in the water. You'll find this expertise neatly packaged with impeccable service at Fish 'N' Fins, Palau's most respected dive operator.

Established in 1978, Fish 'N' Fins is at the core of Palau's dive community. After decades of working in the dive industry, Francis Toribiong created Fish 'N' Fins on the site of what was Palau's first dive shop. Today, almost 20 years later, Francis continues the Fish 'N' Fins tradition of friendly service and great diving with the help of his wife Susan and the rest of the Toribiong family.

Fish 'N' Fins is strategically situated along the water's edge, adjacent to the Marina Hotel—just minutes, by foot or taxi, from Koror, Palau's main shopping district. The Fish 'N' Fins retail facility is stocked with dive equipment, T-shirts and assorted accessories. Outside, a fleet of small (six- to 10-passenger) boats are on hand to transport guests safely and comfortably through a maze of islands to Palau's best diving.

The Fish 'N' Fins staff have, over the years, located more than 50 unique dive sites in the Palau Lagoon area. They've also uncovered fifty ships from the Japanese Imperial Navy. The most popular sites are the drop-offs: Big Drop-off, Ngemelis, Peleliu and Blue Corner which attracts sharks, mantas, barracudas, jacks, myriad reef fish and an endless assortment of big pelagics. Equally intriguing are the walls and reefs—adorned with sea fans, sponges and enormous soft coral trees, woven into a breathtaking tapestry.

Fish 'N' Fins offers two- and three-tank daily charters, as well as night dives. Instruction is offered for beginners who want to learn to dive, and also for certified divers, wishing to continue their underwater education. Full day/half day trolling is also offered, along with picnic/snorkel excursions to Palau's mushroom-shaped, emerald-green Rock Islands.

As Palau's popularity increased over the years, the Toribiongs saw the need for accommodations that were convenient and affordable. So, in 1989, with the aid of a Japanese partner, they built the Marina Hotel right next to the Fish 'N' Fins Dive Center. The Marina Hotel features an indoor restaurant, seaside bar and 27 cozy, air-conditioned rooms, all with sweeping views and private balconies.

BOOK IT ▶ Dive with the Fish 'N' Fins family and you're sure to enjoy the absolute best Palau has to offer. Convenient packages are available, which combine accommodations, meals and diving. To make reservations, or for additional information, contact Fish 'N' Fins direct in Palau. Phone 011 (680)488-2637;

Francis and Susan Toribiong founded Fish 'N' Fins and the Marina Hotel which is next door to the dive center.

Bayman Bay Club

HOT MAY DEALS AT BAYMAN BAY CLUB

Guanaja—home to Bayman Bay Club—is the tallest and second largest jewel in the chain of the Bay Islands of Honduras. The hilly island is as unspoiled as it is picturesque: no cars or roads—just mountain peaks jutting from the green jungle.

During May, Bayman Bay Club is serving up a tantalizing dive package and two underwater photography programs. If you're interested, don't delay—call the reservations office today.

The resort is offering their "Five For Five" special for May 6 to 11. For $500, divers enjoy five nights of ocean-view accommodations, all meals, five days of two-tank boat trips, night dive, unlimited shore diving, waterfall outing, beach barbecue party and ocean kayaks for exploring the blue waters around the island.

Noted photographer Dan Auber will teach two week-long underwater photography courses. The first runs from May 11 to 18; the second, from May 18 to 25. Each session features a photo contest and equipment giveaways. The fee for the photo course is $150.

Bayman Bay is a hideaway with gentle sea breezes, spectacular sunsets and some of the finest diving in the world. Underwater visibility averages 85 to 125 feet. Just offshore are mammoth corals, fringing reefs and impressive undersea walls. The reefs surrounding the island are a thriving marine environment protected by the national underwater park. Guanaja is famous for its great diversity of fish, invertebrates, sponges, and spectacular hard and soft coral formations.

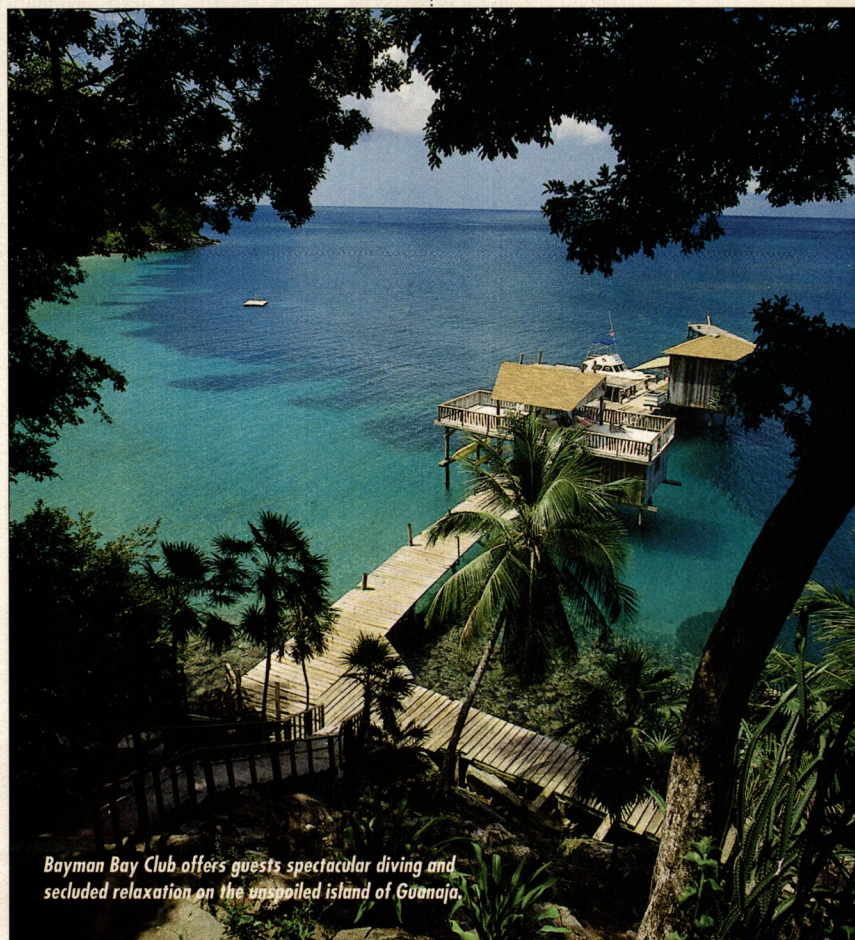

With Bayman Bay's custom dive boats, over 30 dazzling sites are just minutes away from the dive center. Divers can cruise walls, canyons, wrecks, grottoes, caverns and tunnels.

Snorkeling and shore diving adventures begin in the Club's own lagoon. Day and night, divers are fascinated by the living corals, colorful tropical fish and unique undersea formations. Several channels—some up to 200 feet deep—cut through the reef for exotic canyon dives right from the resort.

Bayman Bay nestles in lush tropical vegetation on a sandy beach. The three-level clubhouse is the resort's striking centerpiece. The main level features the dining room, bar and sunset veranda. Upstairs are the library, lounge and game room. One flight up is the observation deck with the best siesta hammock in the islands.

The excellent meals at The Bayman Bay Club are served family-style in the Clubhouse. The bill of fare is a combination of mainland, continental and island cuisines, including a variety of local seafood and fresh-fruit delicacies. Meals are a social highlight of the day.

Meandering paths connect the clubhouse and the 18 cottages that dot the hillside. Each cottage has a spacious bedroom, private bath and veranda with ocean view. Cooled by ceiling fans and shaded by tropical trees, the cottages are comfortable year-round.

BOOK IT ► Attractive low-season rates for Bayman Bay Club are available for stays between April 27 and Dec. 20, 1996. A seven-night package with accommodations, meals, two dives a day and more is $749 pp/do. Phone Bayman Bay Club at (800) 524-1823 or (305) 572-1902. # Dive Dive Dive

THE PERFECT DIVE VACATION RETREAT

It's almost time for vacation — the much anticipated migration in search of fun, adventure and a little relaxation. A week of sunning, funning and diving. A week of dragging soggy dive gear back and forth to a hotel room that doubles as a storage locker. A week of extortionist-rate restaurant tabs, negatively buoyant fast food and dive boat capacities that would sink the QE2.

BUT WAIT! Before you cattle boat your way through another dive holiday, consider this option. A self-contained villa just steps from the dock on the country-quiet south side of New Providence, Bahamas, the home of Dive Dive Dive. It's not a hotel that offers diving, but a dive resort that does one thing — caters to divers. The bungalows are newly remodeled, air-conditioned units that sleep four very comfortably. Fully equipped kitchens, color TV, VCRs, private patios with barbeques and maid service are standard amenities. Continental breakfast is offered and catered lunches are available daily. A few quirky local restaurants are nearby as well as the dining delights along Nassau's famous Bahamian Riviera.

A freshwater rinse tank and spacious equipment storage room are conveniently located next to the boat dock, which definitely makes gear transfer effortless. Dive Dive Dive's easy-on-andoff dive boats make two tank trips in the morning and afternoon. The 36 established dive sites feature dramatic 6,000-foot dropoffs, wrecks and movie sets from James Bond and Jaws 4. Full-day charter trips to Andros, the Blue Hole and the Wall at the Tongue of the Ocean can easily be arranged for any size group.

If that's not enough, twice weekly there is a visit to Shark Alley for an up close encounter with Caribbean reef sharks at feeding time. You will never forget the rush of a six-foot shark gliding inches above your head as it homes in on the handler's bait.

Need more adventure? Think specialty courses. Dive Dive Dive is an ANDI, IANTD, TDI, NASDS, NAUI, SSI and PADI training facility and was the first dive operation in the Caribbean to offer nitrox certification. Extend your diver training with Nitrox, Wreck, Deep Diver or Night Diver courses, or complete your Divemaster and Master Scuba Diver qualifications with First Aid and Rescue Diver courses. For lasting memories, try underwater photography. Rental camera systems, expert advice and same-day developing are available.

Need more than diving? A lone-some stretch of beach is moments from your villa for lazy afternoon sunning or late-night star gazing. If you're still not tired, try horseback riding, cycling, casino roaming or a leisurely shopping trip along Nassau's Bay Street.

Dive Dive Dive's recently renovated resort villas offer divers a convenient and very comfortable alternative to Nassau's major hotels.

BOOK IT ▶ The sun is shining, the water's great and Dive Dive Dive is just a short flight from anywhere. Call and ask about their Spring Escape offer. From April 13 through June 29, a seven-night stay (based on double occupancy) is just $860 for the first diver and only $430 for the second. For information and reservations, call toll free at 800-368-3483 or fax 809-362-1994. From Nassau call 362-1143. Mention you saw this article in Rodale's for a bonus!

HOT SUMMER SPECIALS STRETCH THROUGH WINTER'S CHILL

Dive Provo wants to make your summer last through December 21st. Hot specials start at $414 pp/do for a jam-packed package: Four days at the Turquoise Reef Resort and Casino. Two mornings of two-tank dives. One afternoon or night dive. Daily breakfast buffet. Cocktail party and Divers' Happy Hour with slide show. Transfers, hotel taxes and gratuities. The package also features a free REEF ID full-color book per diver. Travel from April 21 - Sept. 30 and get another afternoon or night dive free.

Dive Provo is a PADI 5-Star Facility at the Turquoise Reef Resort and Casino in Providenciales. It's also a complete watersports center with a friendly, professional staff and three roomy, fast boats. The 42-foot jet-powered Provo Explorer whisks divers to exciting sites beyond the range of slower boats. The dive center offers a complete range of PADI instruction, including check-outs, advanced training and specialty courses, plus NAUI and SSI referrals. Camera enthusiasts appreciate the Underwater Photo and Video Center and E-6 film processing.

BOOK IT ► In June and September '96, bring a group of 10 divers and save: Pay for eight diving/hotel packages, and get two free. Getting to Providenciales is now easier than ever: American Airlines just added a second daily flight from Miami. Phone the U.S. reservations office for other packages: (800) 234-7768. Ask about the resort's "Kids Stay Free" program. Fax (954) 351-9740.

Explorers

know that that meant anything," he recalls. "This was the Jurassic. Back then, people were building their own rigs out of fire extinguishers and going down with anything." As underwater and photographic technology developed, Kristof and partners like Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution senior scientist Bob Ballard molded it for their own purposes. Using a remote camera and a 16mm lens, he shot the first picture of a submersible working deep—Alvin, puttering 12,000 feet down in the Cayman Trough in 1976. One year later, Kristof was part of the team that sent a camera sled into hot deep sea vents 9,000 feet down in the Galapagos Rift and produced the first images of an ecosystem unlike anything else on earth. "The food chain begins with this bacteria that feeds on the hydrogen sulfide in the vent," Kristof explains. "The sun isn't involved at all. And these bacteria could make up more than 50 percent of the planet's bio-mass. It was like meeting God, and discovering that God is this gigantic mass of white bacterium."

In the late 1970s, Kristof sketched out a station wagon-sized sled outfitted with electronic cameras that he figured could advance the search for the Titanic. With Navy money, Ballard built this contraption—the Argo—in the early 1980s, and, in 1985, it located the Titanic in 12,400 feet of water and photographed the wreck for the first time. In 1991, a team that included Kristof introduced IMAX technology to deep water by making the documentary Titanica.

"I guess I've done the whole Indiana Jones bit with my life," muses Kristof, who somehow found time away from the water during the last three decades to amass an equally impressive topside portfolio—the Vietnam War, the space program, the Serengeti, Air Force jet fighters. But Kristof is eclipsing all of this with his current project—a $6 million IMAX film on the hot water vent ecosystems, the most expensive nature documentary ever conceived. The project involves two Russian Mir subs, high-definition cameras and development money provided by Jim Cameron, director of The Abyss and the Terminator films. Kristof is pumped: "The vent ecosystem has changed the way scientists are searching for life on other planets. This film will probably be the closest thing to visiting another planet that people will get to experience for generations." ☉

Expeditions to The CARIBBEAN and The INDO-PACIFIC

DIVE TO CONSERVE THE WORLD'S CORAL REEFS

Coral Cay Conservation needs adventurous volunteers to spend 1-3 months surveying a variety of marine habitats as part of the Belizean and Filipino Governments' "Coastal Zone Management" Initiatives. Based on beautiful, remote coral islands, divers will work in teams, gathering scientific data to help conserve some of the world's most spectacular coral reef systems. Over 1,000 volunteers have dived with us since 1991. It changed their lives, let it change yours!

- All scientific training provided
- No previous experience required
- Minimum diving qualifications - PADI Open Water Diver, or equivalent
- Expeditions depart monthly throughout the year.
- From only $2,250 - 4 weeks to $4,850 - 12 weeks (excl flights)

After a frustrating day off the Patagonian coast of Argentina trying to photograph dusky dolphins—Lagenorhynchus obscurus—I wrote in my journal, “I wish obscurus would not be so obscure.”

Like a good pizza, the key to this assignment was in the anchovies, the primary prey species for dusky dolphins. The dusky, an inshore species related to white-sided dolphins, is found in temperate and cold waters throughout the southern hemisphere. Where there are anchovies, you’ll find the dusky dolphin. But getting to the anchovy school to photograph this feeding behavior before the dolphins got there was another matter. Many times I would arrive at the center of a feeding frenzy, but by the time I slipped into the water, the dolphins—and the anchovies—had long departed, leaving a green and empty ocean. Were it not for the silver scales of dead anchovies falling through the water column, I would have thought it all a dream. But persistence pays off, and on many occasions I found myself at the center of a feeding frenzy.

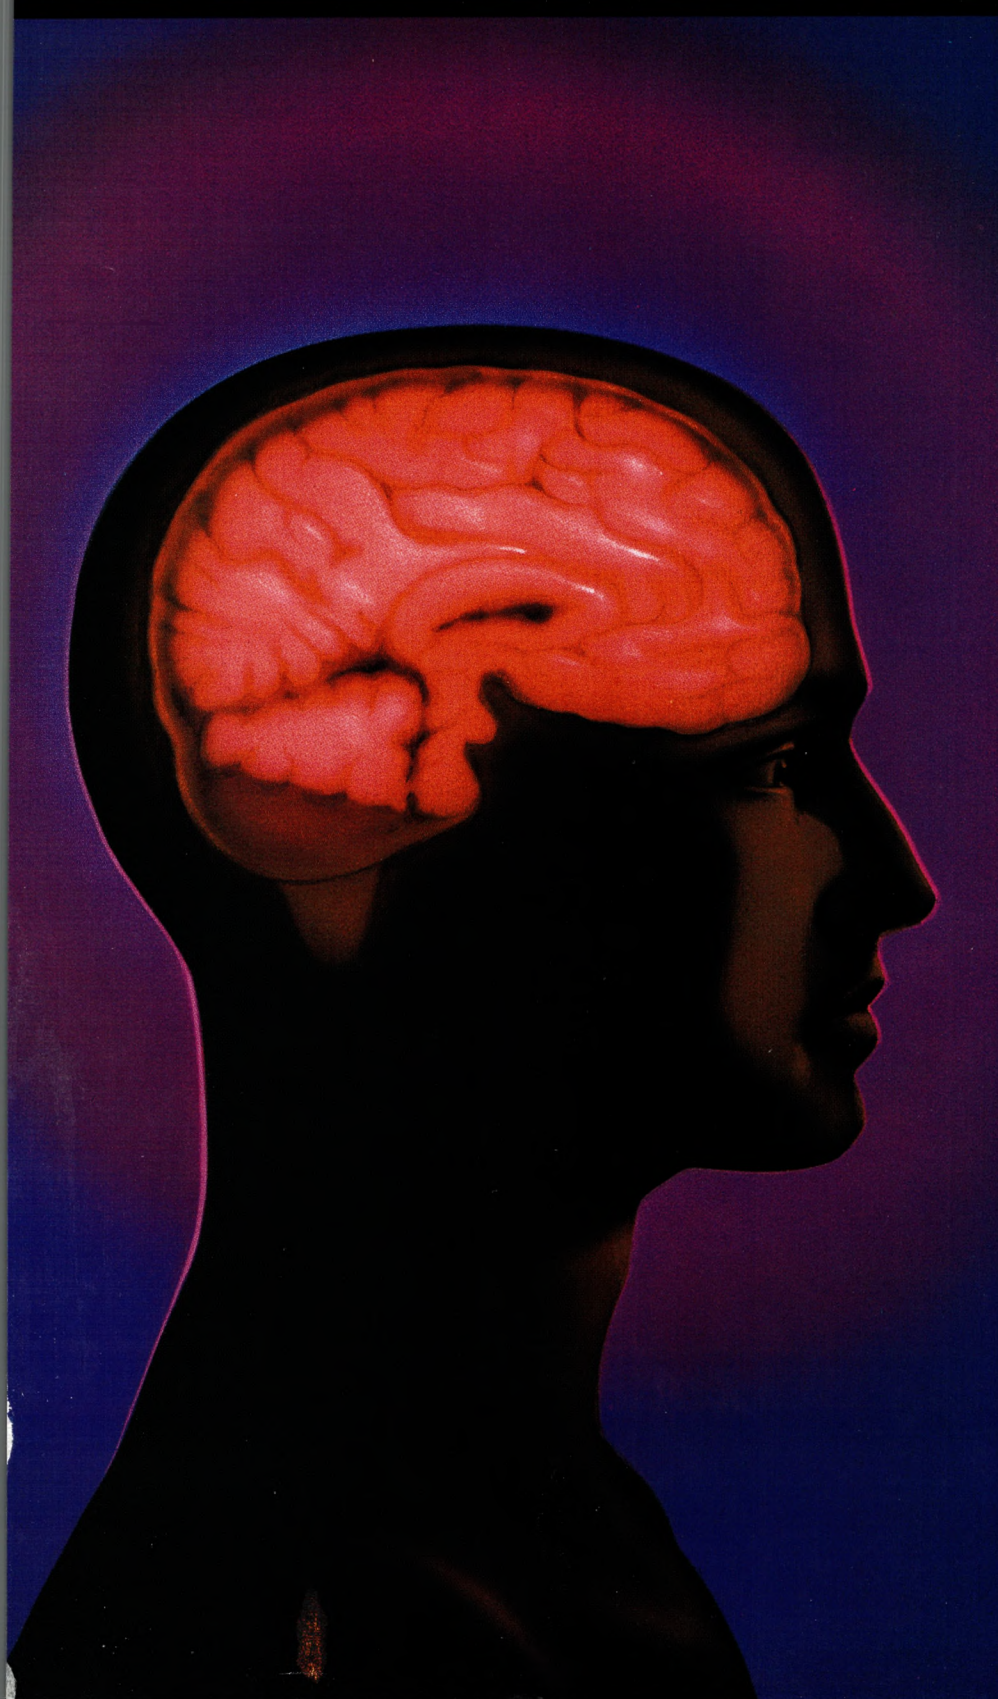

Diving the inshore waters of southern Argentina is not unlike diving off New Jersey. The water is green continental shelf water with little visibility. After the dolphins had their fill of fish, they would often swim around us in a curious fashion. My dive assistant, Bora Merdsoy, is framed by a group of curious dusky dolphins in this photograph.

One piece of equipment you won't need when you dive with the Aladin Nitrox.

Not that we're suggesting you don't need your brain.

However, the Aladin Nitrox takes care of all the complex calculations required to dive on Oxygen enriched air. So your brain is free to do other things. Like enjoy the dive.

As with all dive computers, the Aladin Nitrox lets you maximize your bottom time by taking advantage of multi-level diving calculations.

Like the Aladin Air X, it adapts to an individual diver's behavior and calculates how much air you will need to get to the surface.

Program in your increased Oxygen level, and the Aladin Nitrox gives you a significantly extended bottom time.

The Aladin Nitrox lets you dive on air or program in an amount of Oxygen from 22% to 50%, in 2% increments.

Because a PC is not required to change the  $O_2$  mixture, you can dive on different mixtures throughout the day. The Aladin Nitrox simply recalculates your bottom times, when you change the Nitrox mixture.

The Aladin Nitrox estimates the Oxygen uptake according to workload and has a CNS clock to keep an eye on Oxygen toxicity.

Also the maximum partial pressure of Oxygen can be programmed via a PC.

The Aladin Nitrox does all the calculations in its brain so you don't have to do them in yours.

Naturally, there are a few technical details you should know about Nitrox before you use the Aladin, and these are taught at any number of specialized dive centers.

All in all, the most trying thing about the Aladin Nitrox is deciding where you should dive.
